WHERE DUTY IS BEFORE LOVE

Terrible Experience of Young Russian Officer.

SENT TO KILL DEAREST FRIEND

Meets Him in Road and Penetrates Disguise, Whereupon He is Compelled to Shoot Him.

WARSAW, Nov. 6.—(Special).—Serge Alexandrovitch, a young officer in one of the regiments of dragoons stationed at the town of Nilawa, near the German frontier, has been compelled, in the performance of his duty, to shoot his dearest friend, a Polish patriot who became entangled up in an unsuccessful attempt to kidnap the governor general of Warsaw. Yet, terrible as the tragedy may appear to the reader in the United States, it is but typical of the conditions which prevail today in Russia. Jan Piotrowski, Alexandrovitch's Polish friend, served his time in the Russian army in the same regiment as his future executioner. The men became both companions. Upon the expiration of the compulsory term the Poles resigned and came home to Warsaw. The two young men, however, remained firm friends and constant correspondents. Frequently, when he could obtain leave, Serge Alexandrovitch came to visit Jan here.

and replaced by Poles. All was satisfactorily arranged—on paper—and Jan was among the conspirators, though he had little more than a passive hatred for the government. Serge noticed a change in his friend when he went up to Warsaw. All the youth's spirits seemed to have left him. "What is the matter?" he asked one night at a gay supper, after he had vainly striven to bring a smile into the other's face. "Nothing," was the reply. "I'm sleepy and will go home to bed." Instead, he left the supper table to attend a secret meeting at which lots were cast as to who should be entrusted with the task of kidnaping and holding prisoner the governor general. The fatal choice fell upon Jan and final arrangements were soon made. Dressed in his dragoon's uniform he was to go to the governor general's summer residence on the outskirts of Warsaw and demand to see him, saying he bore private and pressing dispatches from the garrison at Nilawa concerning the Germans, who are continually looking hungrily across the Russian frontier. Once in the governor's presence there was no fear of his plan falling because the conspirators had chosen a friend in the police who were known to harbor judges against the official would be on guard at the house.

As these supposed secret dispatches were timed to arrive in the evening, the young soldier would be received in the governor's private room overlooking the park. The men on guard there were Poles, who had bribed the police to change uniforms. The victim would be gagged, carried through the park and hurried to a quiet road, where a closed motor car waited. No violence was to be used unless absolutely necessary. Officials to Be Hostages. Simultaneously with the capture of the governor general all the other high Russian military and civil officials would be seized and imprisoned in various quiet country houses. If the czar granted the demand of the conspirators for autonomy these men would be released; if not, they were to be killed and an attempt made to forcibly secure the reins of government. It was as mad, daring and hopeless a plot as ever youth conceived.
