ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE'S SPEED

One Hundred and Thirty Miles an Hour Beats the Steam Brother to Franzie.

The electric locomotive has its steam brother badly whipped as to speed, and it only remains to build tracks that will bear trains at over 100 miles an hour to learn just what can be expected of the electric trains. At the celebrated Berlin Zossen speed trials in 1908 was established the amazing 120 miles an hour record—the fastest that any man or man-made machine ever traveled. It is almost 200 feet a second, or equal to the speed a man would attain in falling from the top of a twenty-story building. It is a speed so great that a deflection of one of the rails of an eighth of an inch is sufficient to throw a train off the track. It is so fast that the front of the locomotive must have a great knife-shield to cut the wind, which otherwise would either check the speed or crush in the front of the engine.

A train running at this frightful speed of 130 miles would circumnavigate the globe in a week. It would place the Pacific within twenty-four hours of the Atlantic. Will such a thing ever come to pass? Perhaps. A hundred years ago thirty miles an hour was a marvelous speed; now it is common.

If a train can make 130 miles now experimentally why may not this speed be common in the year 2007—Metropolitan Magazine.
