

IN TROUBLE

Schmoller & Mueller Piano Co.
 Come to my rescue and give me a show,
 How can I ever the right number gain,
 Much as I try they are never the same.
 Oh! have I counted with very great care,
 Leaving unwashed my nice china ware,
 Letting the kitchen utensils and pots,
 Every thing go to count up the dots.
 Rising next morning to try it once more,
 And then disappointed as often before,
 Never to find that my figures agree,
 Don't you think it's discouraging to me?
 May I ask you a question my dear honest sir,
 Under what rule to count with a bunch in a blur,
 Each tiny black spot, do you call it a dot,
 Letting everything count that looks like a spot;
 Low here is a dash, shall I count it one, too,
 Expecting right soon an answer from you,
 Remember that Pianos don't grow on a bush
 Pardon me then if an answer I push.
 If you will please reply by return mail,
 And I could be lucky enough not to fail,
 No kid could ever be happier than me,
 Only think of a Piano without any fee!
 Could any thing happen to please me so,
 O! Schmoller & Mueller Piano Co.

CLEVER ESCAPE FROM JAIL

Derelict Juror Tells Sheriff He is Freed in Judge's Presence.

SEARS NODS AND ANDERSON GOES

Prisoner Later Calls on Judge for Letter to Get Job Back and is Ordered to Jail—Now Missing.

Discovering that the release from jail of A. H. Anderson, former grand juror, was due to a misunderstanding, Sheriff Bralley is now scouring the city for traces of the missing man, but up to 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon had not succeeded in locating him. Sheriff Bralley did not learn until late Tuesday that Judge Sears had until late Tuesday that Judge Sears, though Deputy Sheriff Stewart understood that was his intention.

Anderson was at his home at 1314 South Twenty-fourth street about 10 o'clock Tuesday night. He left at that time, telling his wife he would call her up by phone and let her know where he was. She did not hear from him.

Tuesday morning after an interview with Mrs. Anderson, Judge Sears called Anderson over from the court house and had a talk with him in his private office. The two came out of the private office together and Anderson said to Deputy Sheriff Stewart, "Well, I'm going to leave you. The judge has let me go."

The deputy sheriff looked at the judge and the latter nodded and raised his hand in a gesture of salutation. Stewart understood the judge was confirming what Anderson had said and took the prisoner over to the jail and turned him loose.

ORDERED BACK TO JAIL

"You go back to jail," said Judge Sears and Anderson went back to the jail. He did not tell Stewart, however, what the judge had told him, but had a social visit with the deputies and distributed some tobacco among the unfortunate ones in the bull pen. He evidently could not serve up his courage to the point of telling the jailer to lock him up again and at this time the misunderstanding had not been explained. Finally he left the jail and went home. Sheriff Bralley a little later found out the mistake and at once sought to locate Anderson, but he has failed so far.

ABILITY

We tend to think of him only as the dashing cavalry leader, whereas he was in reality not only that, but also a great commander. Of course, the fact in his career most readily recognized was his mastery in the necessarily modern art of handling masses of modern cavalry so as to give them the fullest possible effect, not only in the ordinary operations of cavalry which precede and follow battle, but in the battle itself. But in addition he showed in the civil war that he was a first-class army commander, both as a subordinate of Grant and when in independent command. His record in the Valley campaign, and again from Five Forks to Appomattox, is one difficult to parallel in military history. After the close of the great war, in a field where there was no glory to be won by the general in chief, he rendered a signal service which has gone almost unnoticed; for in the Indian wars on the frontier, it was he who developed in the thoroughgoing fashion, the system of campaigning in winter, which, at the cost of bitter hardship and peril, finally broke down the banded strength of those formidable warriors, the horse Indians.

Typical American Career

His career was typically American, for from plain beginnings he rose to the high military position in our land. We honor his memory itself, and moreover, as in the case of the great commanders of his day, his career symbolized the careers of all those men who in the years of the nation's direst need sprang to the front to risk everything, including life itself, and to spend the days of their strongest youth in the most valiant and heroic of all endeavors. Our men are Americans are tainted with having only a material ideal. The empty glory of the taunt is sufficiently shown by the presence here today of you men of the Grand Army, you comrades of the dead general, the men who served with and under him.

In all history we have no greater instance of a subordination of self, of the existing of a lofty ideal over merely material well being among the people of a great nation than was shown by our own people in the civil war.

"And you, the men who wore the blue, would be the first to say that this same lofty indifference to the things of the body, when compared to the things of the soul, was shown by your brothers who wore the gray. Dreadful was the suffering, dreadful the loss, of the civil war. Yet it stands alone among wars in this, that now the wounds are healed, the memory of the mighty deeds of valor performed on one side no less than the other has become the common heritage of all our people in every quarter of this country. The completeness with which this is true is shown by what is occurring here today. We meet together to raise a monument to a great union general, in the presence of many of the survivors of the union army; and the secretary of war, the man at the head of the army, who, by virtue of his office, occupies a special relation to the celebration, is himself a man who fought in the confederate service. Few indeed have been the countries where such a conjunction would have been possible, and blessed indeed are we that in our own beloved land it is not only possible, but seems so entirely natural as to excite no comment whatever.

There is another point in General Sheridan's career which is great for all of us to remember. Whereas Grant, Sherman and Thomas were of the old native American stock, the parents of Sheridan, like the parents of Farragut, were born on the other side of the water. Any one of the five was just as much a type of the real American of what we mean in America as the other four. We should keep steadily before our minds the fact that American-

Burglar Enters Clothing Store Through Transom

A MAN who was on to his job entered our store and helped himself to some of our fine overcoats last night. He evidently was a young man (although we hate to think so) for he was wise to the fact that this is a young man's outfitting establishment and he was also wise to the fact that we carry high grade clothing, for he selected good overcoats, in size 38. We presume he needed something nice to wear Thanksgiving.

If there are any other young men who want to get good overcoats, this is the place to come, but come to through the front door and bring your pocket-books.

Will be open till noon Thanksgiving. BENSON & THORNE, 1317 Douglas Street.

HEROISM

is a question of principle, of purpose, of idealism, of character; that it is not a matter of birthplace, or creed, or line of descent.

"Here in this country the representatives of many of our world races are being fused together into a new type, a type the main features of which are already determined, and were determined at the time of the Revolutionary war; for the crucible in which all the new types are melted into one was shaped from 1776 to 1789, and our nationality was definitely fixed in all its essentials by the men of Washington's day. The strains will not continue to exist separately in this country as in the old world. They will be combined in one; and of this new type those men will bear witness who stand each solely on his own merit as a man; who scorn to do evil to others, and who refuse to submit to wronging themselves; who have in them no taint of weakness; who never fear to fight when fighting is demanded by a sense of duty and morality, but who hope by their lives to bring ever nearer the day when justice and peace shall prevail within our own borders and in our relations with all foreign powers.

"Much of the usefulness of any career must lie in the impression that it makes upon the generations that come after. We of this generation have our own problems to solve, and the condition of our solving them is that we shall all work together as American citizens without regard to differences of section or creed or birthplace, copying, not the divisions, which so beset another, but the spirit of burning devotion to duty which drove them forward, each to do the right as if it were given him to see the right, in the great years when Grant, Farragut, Sherman, Thomas and Sheridan when Lee and Jackson, and the Johnsons, the valiant men of the north and the valiant men of the south, fought to a finish the great civil war. They did not themselves realize, in the bitterest of the struggle, that the blood and the grim suffering marked the death throes of what was worn out, and the birth pangs of a new and more glorious national life. Mighty is the heritage which we have received from the men of the mighty days. We, in our turn, must stir up our souls to meet the great issues of the day, with courage and resolute adherence to right, which marked our fathers who belonged to a generation of the man in whose honor we commemorate this monument today."

Tribute of General Porter

General Sheridan said in part: "General Sheridan showed himself possessed of the highest characteristics of the soldier. Bold, courageous, and brilliant, demonstrating by his acts that 'much more can be done with a good man than is generally supposed.' He was prompt in decision, fertile in resources, possessing an intuitive knowledge of topography, and a keen sense of the value of a man with the patience of a Fabius, it is no wonder he stands in the front rank of the great civil war. His courage and his adding affection. The inspiration of his example roused them to deeds of individual heroism unparalleled in modern warfare, and under his leadership his unconquerable columns pushed on victory with all the confidence of Caesar's Tenth Legion."

Generous of his life, gifted with the tenacity of a Hannibal, the dash of a Murat, the coolness of a Napoleon, the magnanimity of a Cincinnatus, the wisdom of a Fabius, he transformed routed squadrons into charging columns and snatched victory from defeat. He preferred shot and shell to the sword; he would rather lead forlorn hopes than follow in the wake of a conqueror. His standard rose above all others on the field; wherever blows fell thickest his crest was the first to rise, and his men, in the face of opposing ranks went down before the fiercest of his onsets, never to rise again; he never retreated, but the victory banners waved above the strongholds he had wrested from the foe.

Sword Points to Victory

Sheridan's sword always pointed the way to an advance; his hit was never present to the enemy. Under his guidance the flag flew to the victor in America as it did in his proud supremacy. He was never defeated. He loved brave men; he despised cowards. He did not believe the Lord ever intended his work to be made manifest by cowards. His sole ambition was his country's welfare. He simply did his duty and trusted to history for his name; or, praise, the more history discusses the more brilliant becomes the luster of his fame. His record is like a torch, which has lit the path of the nation's life. He proved himself one of the greatest of our country's heroes. He was a man of the people. He gave himself one of the noblest of our country's heroes. He was a man of the people. He gave himself one of the noblest of our country's heroes.

On the 5th of August, 1868, he was called to his final home and the laurel about his head was extinguished. He was laid to rest in the land of the noblest of our country's heroes. He was a man of the people. He gave himself one of the noblest of our country's heroes. He was a man of the people. He gave himself one of the noblest of our country's heroes.
