BIG GAME-FISH OF THE SEA

Sport That Tries Men's Skill and Imperils Their Lives.

THRILLS WITH ROD AND LINE

Danger in Angling for Tarpon, Tuna and Shark—Experiences of Fishermen in the Tropic Seas.

No sport more sensational exists, in the opinion of many persons, than hunting big game of the ocean with rod and reel. At times there are perils to equal any met in the depths of African forests.

DOUBLE BENEATH THE WATER

You have the bait jammed into a sock hole reamed in the thwart, and you hang on desperately, laying all your weight to the reel brake, a square of moosehide, leather that half embraces the spool. It is water soaked and pliable, but still it is fairly smoking with the friction.

Hot Work at Both Ends of Line. One battle with a tuna lasted thirty-four hours and the boat was towed thirty-five miles, after which the fish escaped just as the gaff was reached for it. The angler needs about a week to recuperate from strained arms and bruised fingers after such a contest.

Florida coast is sometimes varied with the size of a clothesline, a chain leader and a steel hook seven inches long are the outfit necessary. A ten-pound grouper is a good bait which the houndlike scavenger of the deep can scent for a long distance.
