Middleton, Author of Idaho Spread

Becomes a Financier. SPOKANE, Wash., Nov. in.—(Special.)— Johnny Middleton, author of the famous Idaho spread, coach of the team at Idaho State college, Moscow, and quarterback of the all-star northwestern foot ball team, has thrown the padded garments onto the top shelf and kicked the pigskin over the fence and become a banker.

This announcement comes as a surprise to many. Middleton has been regarded as a fixture in northwestern foot ball, and the game is really losing something by his withdrawal. He originated the spread play last year. The beauty of the play is that it has ten different possibilities for every time it was tried. It is impossible to frame a defense that will stop it. It is a great a defense that will stop it. It is a great ground gainer. As originally conceived by Middleton the spread may not last, but the variations of the play are being worked on every gridiron of the northwest today. Middleton is noted as a coach and player. He played four years on the Idaho team and was a star every season. He led the college players of the northwest and was selected all-star quarter for the college teams. When his four years were over he was picked as a coach of the eleven and his success was remarkable.
