COAL IN THE NATION'S BIN

Enough in Stock to Reach Far Beyond the Years of the Youngest Inhabitant.

Geologists who are presumed to be great economists, or economists who are supposed to be eminent geologists, try to scare the world from time to time by spreading the speedy exhaustion of coal or gold or timber. We are using all of them lavishly, and so far as we know nature is producing no additional minerals. The forests are not being replaced as fast as they are cut off, but it can be done whenever mankind shall become sufficiently alarmed about the interests of posterity, and the mineral wealth of the world is greater than alarmists have calculated. About fifty years ago England was warned that it was approaching the end of its coal supply, but it is still able to produce enormously in excess of its own requirements. Twenty-two years ago the world was warned that no more large finds of gold were possible, and since then the South African and the Alaskan fields have been discovered and most of the older gold regions have greatly increased their output. The preliminary report on the mineral resources of the United States for 1897 is distinctly reassuring. Mr. Campbell calculates that at the end of the last year there was easily accessible in the fields of the United States nearly two million million tons of coal, or enough to last more than 400 years at the rate of production in 1897. As to this state, and particularly in regard to anthracite, the calculations are much less satisfactory, but he believes the bituminous coal in this state would last nearly 60 years at last year's rate of production. The rate is increasing every year but two or three centuries is as far ahead as we need to look. When we think of the economy of fuel in the use of gas engines,

SAUERKRAUT DAYS IN BERKS

Pennsylvania Region Where the Conception Looms Its in Public Favor.

Sauerkraut "blooms at its best" in Berks county, Philadelphia. And now is the sauerkraut harvest season. Berks county farmers would not be without sauerkraut if they had to send to the Fatherland for cabbages. It is second nature to them. They like it better than the rarest fancy dish you can see before them.

The making of sauerkraut on these farms partakes the nature of a holiday. It is no unusual thing to find a farmer with an acre or two of cabbages, the stalks bearing heads weighing from two to twenty pounds each. After all loose leaves have been removed and the cabbage heads are solid, it is cut into halves, and other hands of the possibilities of electric power generated at waterfalls, and the possibilities of the solar engine, we feel that we need not be anxious about our descendants beyond the year 2300. He estimates that the anthracite would not last 20 years at last year's rate and without waste. But there is waste, and last year's rate will be exceeded. Still, if it shall hold out a century, we may expect the world to have other means of generating smokeless heat and power by the time all the hard coal is gone.—Philadelphia Record.
