PAUL REVERE GETS KNOCK

Famous Revolutionary Ride to "Medford Town" Pronounced Fiction. SIMPLY A LONGFELLOW CREATION. John Hancock's Letter to Elbridge Gerry Raises a Large Doubt—Historical Features of Hal-lowed Incident. Dear Sir: I am much obliged for your notice. It is said the officers are gone along the Concord road, and I will send you a letter full with you that we ought to be serious, and I hope your decision will be effectual. I intend during myself the pleasure of being with you to-morrow. My respects to the committee. I am your real friend, JOHN HANCOCK. Mr. Benjamin says that if Hancock of the committee of safety, knew at 9 o'clock that the troops had gone along the Concord road and hoped they would be "serious." That Lexington and Concord were fully aroused to the danger of the coming of British troops, and that there would be no need for Paul Revere to send through the night his cry of alarm. To every Middlesex village and farm. The guarded expressions in the note, Mr. Benjamin says, are due to the troublesome times when Hancock might expect to have his correspondence betray more information than was absolutely necessary. His position is that this letter proves that by 9 o'clock the committee of safety was well acquainted with the British plans and had sent troops to Concord to be ready. Therefore if the patriots were fully prepared at 9 o'clock, why make the midnight ride to carry news which they had already had for some time? A Question of Time. The evidence of the Hancock letter to Gerry has been known, for it was published in 1828 in a rare "Life of Gerry"; but the date with the "9 o'clock" was omitted, so that printed with others it caused no comment. In the original copy the date is there in Hancock's writing. Paul Revere was never famous until the Longfellow poem appeared. Since then historians, remembering that the stone tower, which the poet's hero of "The Skeleton in Armour" had built for his lady turned out to be the old round mill which Benedict Arnold's grandfather had erected, have been looking rather askance at Paul, particularly as Longfellow painted him. Still historians are agreed that Paul Revere actually did exist and did some riding, although not as Longfellow made him do it. After the learned professors had declared their distrust of poetic history, they did manage to find a plain prose version of Paul Revere among the old manuscripts of the Massachusetts Historical society's papers. It proved to be a letter written by Paul Revere in 1788 to their secretary, Dr. Belnap. Right then and there Paul, as Longfellow wrote him, and Paul, as he wrote himself, began to disagree. The first trouble was over the lantern to be hung in the old North church for a signal light. Even now historians are not decided whether the tablet hung in Boston commemorating the spot is placed in the right church, or whether it was Robert Newman or John Pilling who "climbed the tower in the old North church by the wooden stairs with stealthy tread to the belfry chamber overhead." Paul just calls him a friend, and so does Longfellow. Having established the fact that there was a church somewhere and a lantern trouble began to arise. Paul Revere himself wrote that the signal was invented by him for the benefit of some American officers. "Colonel Conant and others," in Charleston, to let them know when the British crossed, fearing that any messenger from Boston might be taken by the British. A Borrowed Horse. When Dr. Warren asked him to go to Lexington to warn Hancock and Adams there, he told his friend to raise the lantern as a signal to Conant in case he (Revere) couldn't leave Boston. Having ordered the lantern to be placed, Revere quietly rowed across to Charleston and borrowed Deacon Larkin's horse. In his

went to the tavern to help move the trunks there. So the historians say stanza twelve couldn't be true, granted any amount of poetic license. He certainly never did "come to the bridge in Concord town" as the clock struck 2 or at any other early morning hour. Having completely taken the wind from Longfellow's sails, the prose letter ends the midnight ride, and goes into great detail on a subject not connected with the tradition. However, the historians are not altogether satisfied with the Revere letter, for he wrote it in 1788, twenty-four years after the ride, and, conceding his honesty, his memory might easily have been had. Considering the many doubts which the learned have come to have of Paul Revere's ride, Mr. Benjamin believes that the evidence contained in the Hancock-Gerry letter shows that it simply never happened at all, outside Longfellow's poem.—New York Times. Most Wonderful Healing. After suffering many years with a sore Anus Ring, Pure Byron, N. Y., was cured by Buckler's Anus Ring, 2c. Beaton Drug Co. Dangerous Townsites. The danger of building towns on lands where the mineral rights underneath have been previously sold by original owners is freshly illustrated in Wisconsin. The city of Iron Mountain, in that state, is located on top of ore beds owned by Senator Stephenson and others. It is now proposed to move the city. This necessitates moving the city. The situation appears to be very like that in some of the coal towns in Pennsylvania, where the coal owners are taking out their coal without much precautionary consideration for consequences to house owners on the surface.—Philadelphia Record. STANDARD OIL'S SPY SYSTEM. Instances of Overcaul Work in Behalf of the Big Combine. And while I am suggesting topics, says "Interpreter" in the American Magazine, there is another department of Mr. Rockefeller's great business which originated with him and which I wish he would be explicit about, and that is the spy system. Certainly Mr. Rockefeller will not venture to attribute this peculiar activity to the "over-seal" of some employe, "hankous for his own or his company's advancement"—the general explanation he gives in the first chapter of his reminiscences to the criticisms made in his concern. I at least know that far from being a case of overzeal the spying on competitors has been a well-organized and most efficient managed part of his business organization for many years. I once had in my hands a great bundle of the anonymous "reports"
