for the invitation you have given us to come here tosay.

We come here with our hearts filled with amity and good fellowship for the people of Council Bluffs. That feeling is bubbling up, effercesing and overflowing in our hearts, so that it has come across the Missouri river, the artificial boundary that separates there two great cities. Surely no one can view this beautiful exposition, and the exhibits therein contained, without feeling a spirit of pride that we live in this great central west. It is a feeling that we live here in these two great states of Nebraska and Iowa, and live in the very best part of the very best country in all the world. And we who live here now, live at the very best time in all its history. These two great states in this great central west are like two great pillers in this political country, upholding this great part of an architecture slanting to the two great oceans on the east and on the west. When we consider what the people who live now and have lived here have done to reclaim this country, when we consider what it is today and its magnificent prospects for the future, we sach one should have a spirit of pride that we are alive now and that we are here.

We awake this world form its savage lethargy. We transform its harren wasts into fruitful field and gardens of beauty. We have tickled it with the play, and it has laughed unto us with the harvest.
