EASY TO OBEY THE DRY LAWS
Western Saloon Keeper Just Smashes Window Bearing Wrong Sales Sign.

A revenue agent connected with the Omaha division was called upon to investigate a saloon operated by Pat McCann in the western part of Nebraska recently, which, within a retail dispensary, was advertised as a wholesale concern.

"Let me see your wholesaler's license," asked the revenue agent.
"Haven't got any," replied McCann.
"Why, your sign on the window out here says, 'Pat McCann, Wholesaler in Liquors.'"

"Oh, that's all right, the clumps out here think liquor is a little better if they can buy it in a wholesale house. I've never sold in any quantities bigger than a drink, but some of the duffers pretty near take a wholesale drink at that."

The revenue agent then began reading from the revenue statutes the penalty for advertising as a wholesaler, the fine being anything from $100 up and from one to six months in jail.

"Say, you read that over again," said McCann.
The agent did so. Then McCann turned to his partner and called out: "Say, you Mike, go there and kick that window out, we are violating the prohibition laws of the country."

Mr. McCann soon had another window put in with the "wholesaler" sign eliminated, and the matter was compromised.

Visiting Nurses' Reception.

The Visiting Nurses' association has announced February 23 as the date for its annual "birthday party," but the place has not yet been decided upon. This reception is always one of the big social functions of the year and until the last two years has been held at some of the larger homes of the city. The attendance has become so large, however, that it takes a private residence, so the association has held it at one of the town hall. WHITE ENAMEL BEDSTEADS

They Are Very Desirable, if Plain. No Matter How Cheap They Are.

The cheapest of white-enamel bedsteads may be made attractive with dainty and at the same time inexpensive trappings. If one is only wise enough to select a bedstead with simple graceful lines and one in which the expense lies in the quality of the enamel used instead of in brass ornaments, the reward will be great. The plain, graceful white-enamel bedsteads minus brass knobs and scrolls, minus scrolls of all kinds, just heavy enough to be firm and practical, without being clumsy, are the best sanitary and sanitary, light bed room. Combined with white-enamel furniture nothing could be prettier. If one wishes to have the rest of the furniture painted a light delicate gray, lavender, pale green, etc., and artistically stenciled, the bed may be made to match. Unless some definite color scheme of this kind is to be carried out throughout the room, however, it is better to have a plain white bedstead than a colored one.

WOMAN FASHIONABLE SAVAGE

Demands Plunge Adornment at Expense of Externalization of Beautiful Bird.

A sign of returning prosperity is the increased cost of ostrich plumes and feathers. Women are beginning to spend freely again, and plumes have increased 25 per cent in price within the last two months. The woman who prides herself upon exclusiveness just now affects the egret plume, which is being shown in rarely beautiful specimens. The demand for fashion for egret is leading to the destruction of the natural curves of the figure but not defining them. Thus, if the short waist should be out of style, the model will pass muster; and yet, if present lines retain their prestige the loose straightness will offset the lengthened waist.

stop to think of the cruelty they practice. The heron is unfortunate in that imitations are not made easily, and are recognized by even the untrained eye. The plumage of the heron is so beautiful in its contrast of coloring that it defies successful imitation. Thus by its own beauty this branch of the feathered tribe is doomed. There is no mercy in women where fashion is involved, and dealers are looking to a day when the egret will pass entirely from the market.

WILLING TO GO TO NEW YORK
Disappointment Comes to All, Even to Those with Money to Burn.

A tip has been passed to real estate men of Pittsburgh that Clayton, the magnificent Pittsburgh home of H. C. Frick, on Homewood avenue, is for sale if the right price can be obtained, that the steel king is desirous of quitting this city forever, so far as his family is concerned. According to those close to society Mr. Frick is angry at the lack of interest which was shown in the coming-out party of his daughter Helen here some time ago, and he has decided that hereafter his family will take chances in New York or Europe only. Only fifteen young men, scarcely enough to perform the figures of the dances, were in attendance at the coming-out party at Clayton, according to some of those who attended. This is where Mr. Frick is said to have risen in anger and declared himself, since his daughter had come all the way from New York to open the home here. When a member of the Frick household slammed the door of Clayton in the face of a local society writer, who had gone there to give the social world a true picture of the party preparations, the fight between the Fricks and the social world was on, for the society writer had many friends. Mr. Frick further aggravated matters by declaring that the public had no business gazing on the picture of his daughter and he ordered that her picture be not printed.

EMBROIDERY WILL LEAD
Dainty Lingerie Models Illustrate Summer Styles as Far as Are Known.

Indications are that we are to have a great embroidery summer, and embroidered hands of great beauty are to be had in all widths, some of them showing fine and delicate embroidery designs or plain balise or mull, the material being left with rough edges and meant to be used in the way of having been executed to order for the frock.

The dainty lingerie frock of the group illustrates the use of such bands, and white distinctly chic and emanating from a well known designer, over a dress of the figure but not defining them. Thus, if the short waist should be out of style, the model will pass muster; and yet, if present lines retain their prestige the loose straightness will offset the lengthened waist.

"DOES SEEM SILLY," SAYS JIM

Mayor Admits Voting Bonds for Empty Building is Foolish.

BUT EXCUSES DEMOCRATIC ACTION

Instead of Blaming His Administration, Supposed to Be Conducting City's Affairs, He Lays It on Legislature.

Mayor Dahlgren says it "does seem kind of foolish" to vote bonds for the erection of a fire station house on the vicinity of Twenty-fourth and Ames avenue when the city has not the money to equip some of the houses it now has, but excuses the non-equipping as no fault of the present democratic administration. The blame is thrown upon the legislature in not giving the city the right to appropriate larger amounts for the use of the fire department.

"The new charter as proposed contemplates raising the fire fund from $17,000 to $25,000," said the mayor, "and if this is done then it will be possible to buy equipment which is needed. The fund ought to be raised to $25,000, but the $50,000 will be a help."

"If the charter amendment is adopted, the increase will enable us to equip the Lake street house, which has stood empty since its completion last July and we may be able to buy equipment for the proposed house above Ames avenue. The city of Omaha certainly needs more fire engine houses and more and better equipment for the department, but our hands are tied in a measure by legislative enactment."

Just Throws Up His Hands.
The mayor washed his hands of any connection with the depositing of city funds, which cost the city 4 1/2 per cent interest, in the hands of a modern central fire house to take the place of engine house No. 3, which occupies rented quarters at Eighteenth and Harney streets. Rent in the sum of $500 a year is paid for this property, but the first move the democratic city council has made to secure a home of its own for the central fire station was in the meeting of the committee of the whole Monday afternoon, when a proposition of purchase was made to owners of a portion of a lot at Nineteenth and Harney streets. The owners of the part lot, the Warsaw Hall association, wanted to buy the other part of the lot held by the city and the councilmen made a proposition to either buy or sell. The street was then made that if the city bought the other part of the lot a central fire engine house would be erected thereon.
