Splendid Exhibit of New Silks

The opening up of the new Silks this week has brought to our counters several surprising fine lots that will be offered Monday for less than like qualities regularly sell.
SOME NEW FOULARDS—There's a comprehensive display of all the late shadings and designs in the popular foulards. In weight, width, quality and finish identical to those selling throughout the country at $1; buy them here at 85c
Directorate Satins are to play a conspicuous part in the fashion world this season. The soft texture renders them susceptible to charming drapery effects in the designing of new gowns. They are a yard wide and come in all the late spring shades.
Rajah Silks—The popularity of Rajahs is more pronounced than ever. There's a wider range of colorings, too. The best, new shades are here. The usual $1.50 quality. $1.25
Satin Finished Foulards—These silks are destined to be the craze of the year. They have the knotty surface effects as brought out in the rough silks. They are slightly lighter in weight and less expensive. There's a wide variety of late shadings, being available also renders them the ideal fabric for spring wear. 24 inches wide. Full line on sale, Monday, at yard. $1.25

A Glimpse of the New Spring Suits

Styles that depict the newest fashions make Monday's display notable as one of the most comprehensive February exhibits in Omaha. The triumphs of our suit section during the closing season are to be surpassed. Plans are laid on the broadest scale. This early showing is the forerunner of the good things in store for you.

Worsted suits of pure wool, light weight materials, with 36 to 40 inch coats, and portraying the hipless or straight line effects predominate. The skirts are gored and circular and most all are severely tailored; here and there there's a touch of bengaline silk that pleasingly breaks the monotony; fancy weaves and new colorings—on sale at $25.00, $29.50 and $35.00

One very striking new lot of suits—with 40-inch coats, which, when put on, show the handiwork of the master tailor. The fit is simply perfect. They are so modeled to produce a striking, graceful form. These are also worsted suits $19.50 with self and button trimmings, all sizes, actual $35.00 values, at.....

New One-Piece Frocks—Bennett's again feature very strongly a wide range of clever models in these one-piece frocks. Our predictions last season have been verified, we were the first to feature them and our sales were enormous. New lines for spring at... $12, $15, $17.50, $25 are conceded the highest type paper patterns in the world. The greatest stores in all the cities throughout America have adopted them. They are simply "musts." Even a child could readily understand them. The guide chart with each pattern aids you to cut and fit correctly.

LONDON POLICE FEAR TAILOR

Imitative Cutter Backs Thirty-Five Graft Prosecutions Successfully.

DECLARES BOBBIES ARE MENACE

Employer Lawyer and Exposes Machinations and Bribes Among Individual Members of the Force.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—(Special).—There is one man in London whom the police are throughly afraid. Strange to say, he is a tailor. His name is James Timewell, and he has fought more policemen than anybody else in England. During the last two years Timewell has been mixed up in no less than thirty-five prosecutions brought against the London police, with results most disastrous to the force. In fact, it was through his efforts that a royal commission recently "bit" on the force in more ways than one. The findings of the commission, though whitewashing the police generally, pointed to severe abuses of authority; and had the investigation not been restricted to "cases of drunkenness, disorder and solicitation in the streets," the report of the commission would have been a highly sensational document.
The modern David, fighting the Goliath of authority, has brought many a policeman to see for merry; sent several to prison, disgraced others, and generally raised such ructions with the force that they prefer to give him a wide berth.
Fighting Police Life Work.
Fighting the police is Timewell's life work. He is a very small man, and most of the London police are great, strapping fellows, and yet Timewell thinks no more of tackling them than if they were so many children. Of course, he does not give them a physical trouncing, but he administers the "Timewell knock-out," which is far more effective and much more dreaded than any corporal punishment.
Here is an instance of his method. Not long ago Timewell chanced to be in a crowd not far from his little tailor shop, 141 Gower street, and saw a policeman roughly handling some one whom he had taken prisoner. In Timewell's opinion the policeman was too heavy for the man with undue violence. So he followed the crowd to the police station and tried to enter the charge room, but was barred by other policemen. On inquiry Timewell ascertained that the man was being badly treated by the policeman because he caught the officer having a glass of beer, and drew the attention of one of his friends to the fact. The policeman "ran him in" for spring on the policeman. This was just the kind of a case in which Timewell delights, so he engaged a lawyer to defend the man. Evidence of the most overwhelming character was brought against the policeman and, finally, the prisoner was liberated and the fake charge which had been brought against the man for assault was judiciously dropped, as the police began to realize that in dealing with the little Gower street tailor they had caught a Tartar. The policeman was degraded and finally dismissed.

Misuse of Police Power.

"I am quite sure," said Timewell, in describing this last case, "that the general public has no conception whatever as to the misuse of power by the London police. They are supposed to be the finest body of men in the world today, and yet, from my personal knowledge of them, I consider the London policemen, under the present system, a positive threat to the liberty of the subject. Why, it has come to such a pass, that the police are actually banded together in a defensive organization against the public. If one of them gets into trouble, all the rest are expected to stand by him, and we beside the policeman who has been instrumental in bringing perjury in order to clear the reputation of a brother officer.
"I know actual cases where policemen have, under oath, committed perjury. Some of these cases I have managed to bring to light, but a prosecution against the police is a very costly affair, and besides this, it is more or less dangerous. In a recent case in which I have been instrumental in bringing perjury charges against the police, one man—a perfectly innocent citizen—was taken off his own doorstep and sent to prison for a month on a quite groundless charge, while another man, wholly unacquainted with him, was arrested on a charge of attempting to 'rescue' the man from the police. The whole case, from beginning to end, was an entire fabrication on the part of the policeman, one of whom was too drunk to report to the station, and had to create or manufacture a 'row' in order to account for his loss of time.
Blackmail is Charged.
"It is not only in interfering with the personal liberty of the subject that the police go to such lengths, but their field of activities extends in many other directions. I know of cases where they extract what is nothing more or less than blackmail tribute from various houses of ill-fame, gambling resorts and similar evil places. I have heard of several members of the force—even in high places—making as much as $50 a month from such institutions. It is surely time that the British public awake to these facts.
"I regard the condition of the London police today as one of the most serious public dangers and, unless the citizens arouse to the true condition, the lives of Londoners will be in the hands of a system of hold-up and blackmail. Evidence is manufactured deliberately by the police and hundreds of false charges are constantly being brought. "I might, however, mention, with some satisfaction, that during the last two years no arrests have fallen off to the extent of some 20,000 as compared to previous years, and I attribute this very largely to the stand which I and our organization—the Police and Public Vigilance society—have taken. I might also add that I have myself been so far immune from police attack owing to the fact that I have made very powerful friends with some of the highest and most influential people in England, and many of my friends are among policemen themselves—the better class of whom are entirely against the tactics of the men who are bringing the police of London into such disgrace."

Black Sheep Among Good.

It may be said with truth that the general run of the London police are splendid men, but there are a number of black sheep among them, and it is these that Timewell is constantly gunning for. Timewell himself seems to lead a charmed life. So far he has managed to remain outside the clutches of the law, though no doubt there are many of the police, both officers and men, who would like to put him safely behind prison bars.
He has been too much in the open as a fighter, however, for the police to touch him, and so he keeps on making trouble for "coppers" who resort to practices not in the strict line of constabulary duty. These "disgraces to the force," as Timewell well calls them, are actual menaces to the public, and the little tailor is devoting a very strenuous part of his otherwise monotonous life to the work of showing them up on every possible occasion. He is also firmly convinced that in many English prisons there are persons wrongly convicted, brought there by the machinations of the police and kept there for fear of the public scandal that would arise in case of their liberation. The now famous case of Adolph Beck was, in his opinion, one of police conspiracy, pure and simple.
Fight Made for Stuns.
One of the strange features of Timewell's crusade is that he has taken up the fight against the police, not on behalf of well-to-do prisoners who might be badly treated, but for the benefit of the rough element whose life is spent in the slums. These people, according to Timewell, are naturally brutalized by their surroundings, and they should be treated with special consideration by the police. If they resist arrest—as they often do—they should be taken to the station, not through the public streets and with the usual exhibition of brute force, but by means of "black-maria." In London fractious prisoners are occasionally strapped to ambulances and carried through the streets, but not often.
While Timewell believes that the police in making arrests should not touch prisoners to give them too much trouble, he thinks culprits should be taken to prison in the most humane manner possible.

Brutality on the part of the police, especially in districts where the rougher element lives, only calls for more brute force on the part of the populace. In rough neighborhoods, no matter how disreputable the characters might be, Timewell claims that they are entitled to every consideration on the part of the police, because these people have been made what they are by their underpaid toil and sordid lives. On this point Timewell in the course of our conversation said:
Protect Poor from Police.
"My object is not to protect people of good social standing and irreproachable conduct, who are comparatively safe from police violence, but to prevent people who, being very poor, live in bad neighborhoods and are habitually coarse, rough, rather foul-mouthed, not invariably sober and occasionally disorderly, from being still further demoralized by unnecessary and illegal bullying and violence in their conflicts with the authorities.
"It must not be forgotten," he continued, "that such people form a very large part of the population of London and that a great deal of the comparative refinement and decency of the rest of us is supported by the incessant and ill paid bodily drudgery that roughness and coarseness them."
Standing almost alone in the advocacy of these principles, Timewell has courted trouble and found plenty of it. Some of his adventures read like tales from Ben Quixote. For instance, one night he and his daughter were walking in Newington Causeway—a rough section of South London—and they came upon four policemen carrying to the station a man by a method called the frog march, which consists in bending the arms back and making the man walk with his face toward the ground. Evidently it is a most uncomfortable way of walking, but it appears to be an extremely effective manner of dealing with the police.
Timewell and his daughter regarded the police on this occasion as treating their prisoner with great harshness, and, though various people in the crowd tried to dissuade the little tailor from interfering, he did not hesitate to tell the police what he thought of them. Furthermore, he and his daughter accompanied the man in the police station. The police in London could not prevent him from lodging his protest. He remained in the station several hours and happened to be present when the medical officer administered to the prisoner, prostrated from the handling he had received from the police, a strong electric shock, in order to bring him to his senses—a gentle little way occasionally employed in police stations. Against this form of additional maltreatment Timewell also strongly protested, and finally left the scene, saying he would bring the four policemen to justice.
By dint of persistent efforts the little tailor managed to raise by public subscription $25 as a defense fund for the case. Out of this little case—which might be termed an ordinary "drunk and disorderly"—there arose quite a furore, and the little Gower street tailor awoke one morning to find himself not only famous, but also much sought after by the police. Several attempts were made to get him to withdraw his proceedings against the four policemen, but he refused, and finally their trial took place. They were, of course, whitewashed and acquitted, but this trial led to some very important results. It proved that Timewell had a fairly good case made out, and though he lost it, it directed public attention to the police and their methods.

The recently published report of the Royal Commission on London Police is not a satisfactory document from Timewell's point of view, and he says that before very long some startling revelations will be made regarding the London police. He is certainly stirring things up considerably, and either the police will have to get to work or some one will—as one of his enemies graphically expressed it—have to "put the lid on Timewell."

Fred Bruning paid for his chairmanship of the Board of County Commissioners of Douglas county Saturday noon. Fred Bruning, who was elected as a republican and secured democratic votes to elect himself to the chairmanship, was the leading figure in putting through a resolution dispossessing the present incumbents of the above named offices and filling them with the men indicated.
Not only did Bruning, Pickard and Bedford make up their slate, but they refused to consider at all formal applications for appointment already on file with the board.
Kennard claims that, according to all parliamentary practice, the action of Saturday was illegal. To suspend the rules requires a two-thirds vote and the three of the five mustered is less than this. Bruning also engaged in the spectacle of voting to sustain his own ruling, which Kennard held, the chairman of a meeting has no right to do. The vote on the appeal stood two to two. Bruning then instructed the clerk to cast the chair's vote to sustain the ruling.
Stryker Goes in March 1.
Most of the appointments provided for in the resolution take effect April 1, but Stryker is to get Hoff's place as custodian of the court house March 1 and L. J. Flynn, a brother of Tom Flynn, street commissioner of Omaha and president of the Bohman Democracy, will also begin work the earlier date.
The resolution to appoint Ellasser and the others was offered by Commissioner Bedford and seconded by Pickard. Commissioner Kennard immediately requested that in all fairness the matter go over to the next meeting. Commissioner Trainor, on Bruning's shaking his head, jumped to his feet and cried:
"You are adopting a species of ring rule.

PUBLIC BATHS AT Y. W. C. A

Equipment for the Gymnasium is Ordered and Will Soon Reach Omaha.

Although no special donation has yet been made to the furnishing fund to cover the equipment for the gymnasium of the new Young Women's Christian association building has been ordered and shipped and will be installed ready for the opening of the building, which is expected will be celebrated March 18. This item amounts to $5,000 and will have to be taken from the general fund unless some special gift is made. It has not been generally understood that the gymnasium equipment includes the pool and the baths, several of which are to be public. There will also be public lavatories and arrangement may be made whereby the pool or plunge can be opened to the public at specified times.

WARRANT FOR MAXIM GORKY

Russian Police Are Searching for Novelist, Last Heard From in Florence.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 13.—The police have issued a warrant for the arrest of Maxim Gorky, the well known Russian novelist. In the document Gorky is described as "a Nishni-Novgorod house painter."
Maxim Gorky is at present in Italy, and recent dispatches have said that he proposed to reside permanently in Florence.
