A Souful Sign for Return of Buckwheat Breakfasts of Bygone Days. "I have wondered sometimes," said the amiable head of a voracious family, "why we didn't have more griddle cakes, wheat and buckwheat, and that sort of thing in our house, because I am very fond of such cakes, and so are all the children, and of buckwheat cakes in particular I have a very pleasant recollection. "When I was a boy we used to have always buckwheat cakes for breakfast in winter, with fried pork chops or fried sausages, and I used to think that a breakfast good enough for anybody, and I am still devoted to the same opinion. "The cakes were used to mix in a batter pot that was different from any piece of crockery I ever saw, and that I can see now in my mind's eye as plainly as if it stood before me, a deep, straight sided, earthenware pot of a very dark brown color, and in capacity about a gallon and a half, and having in one side of its edge a pouring lip and on the other a handle; the only pot of just that style and dimension that I ever saw, and perhaps it was the only one ever made. "And we valued it highly. I know that if anything had happened to that pot it would have been regarded as a household calamity, fatal to all as a handle; come through your year after year of use, and mixing of the batter in it was mighty familiar household rite, the last thing done in the house in winter before we went to bed. "Every morning when the cakes were cooked the wax left in the pot just enough of the material to serve as yeast for the next day's batch; and every night the last thing we did was to get out the buckwheat batter pot and mix up in it the batter for the next morning's cakes; and then we would put a loose cover on the pot and then set it near the kitchen stove, where it would get a little warmth but not too much, so that the batter would rise just right. And sometimes it would run over, but not often, for our folks were high experts in making buckwheat batter, and usually our batter rose just enough to fill the pot, rising at the same time to the morning the batter was thinned down a little; so that it would spread just evenly right when poured on the griddle, and then the family was ready to eat 'em. "It seems to me that the pork chops we had to be had now; they were from locally raised and fattened pigs, and they were very tender and superior, and certainly it would be difficult to find now such sausage as we had then. "And we used to eat those buckwheat cakes red hot off the griddle, with those superior pork chops, or those extra superior sausages, and with the pork or sausage grease on the cakes—a morning meal of great delight and glory."—Boston Herald.

SANDLOTTER FROM WAYBACK

Something About Grove Johnson, Leading Anti-Japanese Agitator of California. "This man Grove L. Johnson, who is strictly up to the whole country by his extreme anti-Japanese stand in the California legislature, is a politician of extraordinary ability and a speaker of tremendous force," said Judge E. W. Carrier of San Francisco to a Baltimore American reporter. "He is the floor leader of the republicans in the house, and chairman of the judiciary committee. The most extreme measures aimed at the Japanese ever yet introduced in any legislative body are those fathered by Johnson, and which were the direct cause of Roosevelt's interference. "Grove Johnson was sent to congress a few years ago, and one day in the house of representatives at Washington, was the principal actor in a very sensational episode of which I was a witness. It seems that he had incurred the ill-will of William H. Hearst by falling to agree with him in some pending political matter, and the rupture Hearst's papers printed a story of Johnson's early life in New York state, where he lived prior to his migration to the Pacific coast. The article reflected on the Californian in a very injurious way. I shall never forget how Johnson, rising to a question of personal privilege, replied to it. He at once elicited the respectful and sympathetic attention of all his colleagues, and the big chamber, usually as noisy as a schoolboys' playground, became as hushed as though a funeral were taking place. Johnson began by a frank admission that he had, in the ignorance of boyhood, and while living in his native town, committed a grave fault relating to a business transaction. He had moved away to the other end of the continent, engaged in hard toil, earning a trifling sum that had lapsed into the hands of an unscrupulous returned to his former home, where everybody had given him a glad welcome, having long since forgotten him his youthful folly. In his adopted home the people must have thought him a man of honor and ability or else they would never have chosen him as their representative in the congress of the United States. "His peroration, in which he scored those who would, at the end of a third of a century, rake up a boyish sin, was superb, and when he ended his speech that went up from every man in his audience, republicans and democrats alike, created a tumultuous din, the like of which had seldom been heard in that historic place. The cheers were a spontaneous tribute of respect, and were evidence that his self-vindication had been complete." Bigger, Better, Buster—That's what advertising in The Bee does for your business.

HARVARD'S NEW PRESIDENT

Personality of Abbot L. Lowell, and the Policy He Will Pursue.

YEARS DEVOTED TO EDUCATION

A Man of Millionaire Class, Long Connected With University, and Familiar With Its Needs—A Champion Athlete.

Harvard university in May will have a millionaire president at a salary of $5,000 a year. Abbot Lawrence Lowell, who has been elected by the corporation to succeed President Charles W. Eliot upon his retirement in May, is estimated to be worth $2,000,000. Part of this substantial fortune, which is a large estate for a scholar, was inherited, but the president of Harvard has had sufficient business acumen to more than double his patrimony, despite the fact that he has given most of his mature years to education. He inherited about $500,000 from his father's estate and also some property from his mother. The accretion of his wealth to its present proportions is due to his shrewd judgment and knowledge of the values of investment securities, and he has become rich—for a Boston scholar—practically within the last ten years. There are possibilities of benefactions to Harvard university at the hands of its new president, for he has no children and his brother, Prof. Percival Lowell, and his three sisters are as wealthy as he is the president-elect. Prof. Lowell several years ago gave Harvard a lecture hall which cost about $100,000. When the money for the building was presented the donor insisted upon concealing his identity, and the structure was known as the "new lecture hall" until the giver was forced to acknowledge his contribution.

A Former Athlete.

President-elect Lowell will appeal to alumni and undergraduates as well because of those additional qualifications: He is a Harvard man, a graduate of the college and of the law school. His grandfather was a member of that exclusive and self-perpetuating corporation known as the Phi Beta Kappa, and he has been intimately associated with "President and Fellows of Harvard College." In his day he was a champion athlete. He never lost a running event in which he was an entrant.
