His position in voting on the bill. He had been elected without opposition in his district and felt that he was representing all the people there. However, the plan of a bank guaranty was in conformity with his own sentiments and he voted for the bill according to his own beliefs. Senator Wiltse said the outcome of the fight on the bank bill had shown that some democrats could be "white men." The republicans had been visited by some of them, who with tears in their voices had begged the republicans not to pass the bill with the emergency clause. They were bound by a pledge of their party and by the lash of a merciless leader and could not take a step aside from the path he had outlined for them. While opposed to the provisions which put so much power in the hands of the governor, he felt he would push the measure along and would not stop to argue about the credit to whom the measure was due. He voted for the bill. Cain of Richardson—The people of our state have said that they want a bank guaranty law. This bill does not meet my approval in many of its provisions, nor do I approve the methods employed in its drafting, and advancement. However, I do not care to stand in the attitude of opposing what the people seem to want, and as this seems to be the only chance to enact legislation of this character at this session, I vote aye. Cox of Hamilton—The principle of banks guaranteeing their depositors is to my mind so eminently just and fair that while I believe R. F. 292 to be much the better bill, there being some very objectionable provisions in H. R. 423, in changing the banking board, yet I cannot forgo the privilege of registering my vote in favor of the principle involved in making depositors absolutely secure in their deposits. I therefore vote aye. Senator Randall explained his vote as follows: As H. R. 423, is in my judgment unconstitutional and will be detrimental to the state, and will not accomplish what the democrats claim it will, but will disorganize the entire banking system of the state and take the supervision of the banks out of the hands of the men who have proved themselves capable and place the state banking department on the democratic platform, and seeks to carry out the old democratic principle of putting the national banks out of business, and as the only reason that has been advanced why this bill should become a law is, that it is carrying out the wishes of the Peoria leader and as every financial measure proposed by him as proven to be impracticable and against the best interests of the people, and fully believing that this measure is in the same class with the "free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1" and believing that the democrats will be as anxious to forget this law as they are to forget they were for "free silver and being desirous of saving them and the people from the humiliation, I vote no."

which now has a duty on lumber from the United States. The lumbermen of these states hope, by the removal of the duty on lumber, eventually, to obtain a similar concession from the Canadian government and they claim that the price of their product would not be changed by a removal of the tariff. Senator Frye of Maine today said that the removal of the duty from wood pulp would transfer that industry to Canada and stated that 10,000 men now employed in the woodpulp and paper business would be placed in forced idleness. These industries, he said, represented $70,000,000 in capital. With free hides he believed the 50 per cent reduction in the boot and shoe schedules would be fairly acceptable. "In a general way the house bill is quite acceptable to Connecticut," said Senator Burkeley today. He did not think there would be serious objection to the inheritance tax. His state now imposes a tax on inheritances.

Callum is Satisfied. "As a whole, the house bill is a pretty good tariff measure," said Senator Callum. "It ought to satisfy those who have been clamoring for a reduction. While a reduction has been made in the duty of farm machinery, the provisions of this bill will allow us to enter the markets of France, which have been closed. The inheritance tax is all right as a source of national revenue, although Illinois rightly enforces a tax of that kind." Senator Curtis said that Kansas would stand out for a duty on hides, and added that he would not want a substantial protection on its dried egg industry, the importance of which, he declared, was not generally realized. Mr. Cumber declared himself in favor of free lumber and a tariff on hides, and insisted that the inheritance tax was all right.

Senator Bailey insisted that one of two things would have to occur in respect to the duty on hides and boots and shoes. If boots and shoes and other products of leather are protected, he believes there should be protection for hides. He would have no objection to free hides if the same principle of exemption could be adopted in respect to articles manufactured from leather goods. It is understood that Mr. Bailey will give the senate an opportunity to vote upon an amendment providing for an income tax, and he will maintain that if an income tax has any element of unconstitutionality that objection will apply with still greater force to a tax on inheritance.

If the income from real estate cannot be taxed on the ground that it is direct taxation, he believes that a tax on the real estate itself is in greater violation of that principle. Senator Aldrich, chairman of the committee on finance, is giving great attention to the tariff bill, and it is well known that he is fully convinced that many changes must be made in order to make the bill acceptable to the senate. With few exceptions, including the reduction of the tariff on barley and the placing of hides on the free list, Senator Johnson of North Dakota found the bill entirely acceptable. He especially approved the inheritance tax provision and added: "The bill was thoroughly revised downward except on luxuries and some other important items. It is the Dingley bill up to date with improvements, the greatest of which is the automatic minimum and maximum. That gives real and friendly reciprocity with all the world without the necessity for continually applying for the slow action of congress."

Inaction Riles People of Sicily. PALERMO, March 19.—The people of Sicily are becoming aroused at what they characterize as the inefficiency of the government and the police in their efforts to run down and arrest the persons who are responsible for the assassination of Joseph Petrosini, the American detective. A popular demonstration in censure of official inaction and to express sympathy for the victims of Sicilian crimes is being strongly urged.
