Gleanings from the Story Teller's Pack

A Line of Talk.
VO telephone girls were talking over the wire one afternoon. The subject of the conversation was a lawn party, which was to take place the next day. Both were discussing what they should wear, and after five minutes had come to no decision.
"In the midst of this important conversation a masculine voice interrupted, asking humbly what number he had. The lack of reply did not squelch the inquirer, for he asked again for the number.
"One of the girls became indignant, and scornfully asked:
"What line do you think you are on, anyhow?"
"Well," said the man, "I am not sure, but judging from what I have heard, I should say I was on a clothesline." Philadelphia Ledger.

A Woodland Amantia.
The food wife was in one of those sentimental moods when she took especial pleasure in reminiscing on the good old time when she and her husband were sweethearts.
"Billie, dear," she said, "do you remember the day when you carved your initials and mine on that big pine tree at Highview?"
"Yes, dear," replied hubby absently from behind his evening newspaper.
"And how you scratched with your knife the words 'William forever true to Alice'?" continued his wife.
"Yes, dear," came the response, again.
"I wonder," pursued the wife, "if that tree still stands?"
The husband suddenly realized what the faithful Alice was talking about.
"No, it doesn't," he said, "last year when I went to Highview, I cut it down."
"Oh why?" asked she of the troublesome memory.
"Because," replied the husband, "I thought it had been lying long enough."—Fountain Magazine.

friend replied, before I could answer. "Once in a while they do, but not often."—Philadelphia Press.

He Was Unprepared.
Richard Harding Davis, one of Westchester county's new deputy sheriffs, came into White Plains with his kennel master the other day. While awaiting his kennel master outside a dog biscuit shop Mr. Davis discussed sport.
"Sport is as good here as it is abroad," he said, "but abroad they are more punctilious. Your Englishman must always be correct. He has a wardrobe of smooth, sleek, dark clothes for town, a wardrobe of knickerbockers and thick woollens for Alpine winter sports, a wardrobe of flannels for the seashore, and so on, with other wardrobes for deer stalking, for fox hunting, for driving, even for smoking and drinking."
"I remember once, in my early youth, I was shooting over a duke's covers. A very grave and elegant young Marquis was stationed near me. Suddenly the duke shouted to the Marquis:
"There goes a hare! Let him have it!"
"But the Marquis shook his head."
"I can't, duke," he said, "I'm in my pleasant costume."—New York Times.

Pretty Slow.
Horace L. Moore was lieutenant colonel of the noted Nineteenth Kansas cavalry. He could lead men for a longer period without rest, on a single ration of obedient good humor, than any other officer. Though not given to jokes, he was the reputed author of us many astonishers as the great Lincoln.
One time on the march he sent an orderly with a message to an officer at some distance. Before the man was out of hearing Moore shouted: "Hey, orderly! Come back here!"
He came galloping back, sitting limply in the saddle.
Moore dropped his voice, and assuming a half confidential manner, inquired: "Orderly, in the course of your life have you ever seen a snail?"
"Yes, sir," was the astonished reply.
"You met him, then," replied Moore "for you'd never overtake one!"—Kansas City Journal.

Curious and Romantic Capers of Cupid

Engaged Forty Years.
HENRY SINGLEWOOD Bisbing, the noted American painter of animals and landscape scenes, was a passenger on the Red Star liner, Kronland, which arrived from Antwerp, recently. For years he has been living in Paris, having been in this country only twice each time on a short visit—since he left here in 1883. He returns to spend the rest of his days in this country. Incidentally he is to be married.
The bride-to-be is his first cousin, Miss Amelia Coryell Bisbing of Philadelphia. According to the story which he told, they have known each other for fifty years and have been engaged for about forty. Bisbing when very young was adopted by Miss Bisbing's parents, and he and Miss Bisbing grew up together. When asked how it came about that this engagement was for so long, Mr. Bisbing, who in a few days will be 60 years old and whose bride-to-be is 53, answered:
"Well, I engaged to make a reputation as a painter, and preferred not to marry before I had achieved my ambition. I wanted to come back with flying colors or not at all—I wanted to make myself worthy of my country."

A Bachelor's Romance.
A love story that would delight the heart of a novelist ended and began again in New York City when Henry H. T. Beekman of the old Knickerbocker family of that name wedded Beale Haynes Adams, the girl he wanted to marry twenty years ago.
Mr. Beekman, who has been for some years a silent partner of the law firm of which Colonel William Jay is the head, is one of the wealthiest of New Yorkers, with several houses abroad.
But, according to the statement his friends made he would never have bought so much as a shingle in foreign parts except for the fact that when he was 20 years younger he wooed and won and then lost Miss Adams in New York.
The wedding performed in Miss Adams' apartments was practically settled years ago, at the time Mr. Beekman quit Rutgers college as president and valedictorian of his class. On the very eve, according to the reports, his mother set herself to break off the match, and succeeded.
This blighting of his romance is said to have made a temporary misanthrope out of Mr. Beekman. For years afterward he toured Europe aimlessly, then settled in Paris, where he became a member of the law in Paris as silent member of Colonel Jay's law firm just about the time the famous Fair will case came up.
It is said that the brilliant line of evidence produced by Mr. Beekman cost Charles Fair's sister, Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, several millions, because it proved that Mr. Fair was first killed in the motor accident in France that sent both to an almost simultaneous death.
Mr. Beekman is said to have received a fee of more than $200,000. He recently returned to New York, renewed his acquaintance with Miss Adams and the wedding is the outcome.

Bride Plays with Dolls.
"Don't I look cute in my first long skirts?" asked 14-year-old Mrs. Walter Maloney, whose husband is only 18 years old, as she stood in the parlor of her new home in Philadelphia with a doll tucked under each arm.
"I can't give up my dolls," she laughed. "even if I am married."
On February 18 the sweethearts were wedded in Camden. The girl went home, was afraid to tell her mother, as Mrs. Bonter objected to her daughter marrying Maloney on account of her youth.
"When I summoned courage last Saturday to tell mother that I was married to Walter," said young Mrs. Maloney, "she said that I could live at home, but that my husband could not live there, and we have rented this house and set up house-keeping for ourselves."
Overleep on His Wedding Day.
The failure of an alarm to ring Sunday in Roy E. Buzzell sleeping soundly Sunday morning at the hour set for his marriage with Miss Ella Leone Trask, at Athol, Mass., when Buzzell appeared, pale and breathless and four hours late, his bride was in tears.
Buzzell produced the refractory alarm clock in self justification and the ceremony was performed.

Navy of the Air

tion work all over the United States proper, and in Alaska and the colonial possessions, look for their supplies. There are tons and carloads taken in and shipped out each year, and the list of supplies comprises more than 2,600 different articles. For a shipping point the geographical center between the Pacific and the Atlantic oceans has been found just what the doctor ordered. Growth as a storehouse and distributing point alone ought to keep Fort Omaha long at the front when air flight or air flight is under consideration.
Even now several new barracks and utility buildings are in contemplation, such as a modern machine shop and laboratory, which will afford many practical advantages in work and experimenting not now available. One of these days there is likely to be developed in the schools and workshops of Fort Omaha a genius of such bent that the world will listen when he talks of the secrets of this very significant industrial activity. There is, it is agreed, such a field for inventors of daring spirit as the world never before offered. Investigation of the air is not at all an airy subject, but a very serious and solid proposition; mastery of its mysteries, strata, currents, and changing tenses means undying fame and great material returns; and patriotism inspiring the whole should enthuse and illumine, as it does, the hearts and minds of many grand men. Their goal, sure to be reached, is the point where simplicity of construction and ease of operation, certainly of course and necessity of return, will make air machines as handy to men and nations as motor cars are to those who can own and enjoy them.
Whether the United States shall lead or follow in that great day is a subject of keen concern to men like those at work in Fort Omaha, who are hoping and striving in spite of the discouraging and dilatory course of congress, and the unearring, indifferent attitude of a public which should be closely and persistently interested. Here in Omaha at least, and in other places having like stations, interest should be of that character to keep officers and men keyed high with the knowledge of loyal, unwavering and hard-fighting support.
