About Music, Musicians and Musical Events

THE management of Boyd theater deserves the thanks of those members of the community who are interested in music, for the attempt made to observe silence during the long overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" which the Shakespearean play was produced by Ben Greb.

for Paris last night. Or this: "Miss Modeste, buyer for Messrs. Bonnet & Co., has gone to New York to inspect the eastern models."

to inspire them with a love for the greatness of the great things, and people will say you have a power of "hypnotizing" people.

Lily Lena, a singer from the London music halls, comes to the Orpheum for the week commencing with a matinee today.

Richard Crollis, who played here last season with William Courtright in "Peaches," has a little skit for the new week.

"The Round Up" was a convincing play, to a degree; the spirit of thorough independence (of yourself and everyone else) was strongly depicted in that wonderfully original and tremendously brilliant line which the lover "cat" gave utterance to.

It was interesting to notice also that when any movement, so ever slight, was going on in the audience, the stage was perfectly still; it was only when the stage was unoccupied that there was a rustling of whispers which a few discreet "hush" suggestions from a few music lovers served to quiet.

Marie Dressler has found that to be a manager of a London theater is "not all beer and skittles."

Jeannie Mae Hall, a bright little soubrette who used to be a favorite on the popular Wendy in "Les Folies" at the Broadway theater, Los Angeles, that she has been engaged to play the same role when the Barrie play is produced by the stock company at the Valencia, in San Francisco.

Did you ever stop to think how utterly inconsistent is this spirit of wild west jingoism which is so prevalent hereabouts?

Doctors go to Europe and visit hospitals in order to bring to Omaha the latest thoughts in caring for the sick, in order that Omaha may be more healthy or, at least, that their patients may have the best attention and the benefit of the latest research.

It is not the wild west feature of Omaha that commends it for business or for investment; it is the thing which Omaha holds in common with the older and more eastern cities, which does commend it.

Get up an sermon in Omaha with the germ of a thought in it, develop it by slow, patient watching, nurture it and let the darkness of midnight witness your brain labor.

Miss Alice M. Pawcett gave a recital for her pupil, Mr. Hartwell Hamilton, last night at the First Presbyterian church.

There is the inconsistency. Omaha does not want, and will not have, the wild west idea in its habitations, its millinery or its gowns.
