Law of Nations Topic at Meeting in Washington

American Society of International Law Begins Third Session, with Elihu Root Presiding.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Important phases of international law will be discussed at the third annual meeting of the American Society of International Law, which began its third annual meeting here today.

The session will continue for two days. Among the speakers will be men of international reputation in such questions as to the growth of the American system of international law, as compared with universal international law, the powers which international courts of arbitration should possess, political offenses in international extradition, and the codification of maritime international law.

Senator Root, president of the society, opened the meeting today, taking for the subject of his annual address, "The Relation Between the Jurisdiction of National Courts and International Arbitration." This was followed by a discussion of the topic, "Arbitration as a Judicial Remedy." Among those taking part in the discussion being former Secretary of State John W. Foster, who dealt with English and American cases of arbitration, as did also Prof. E. W. Aymer of the New York University Law School.

Wayne MacVean spoke on the work at the Hague in matters of arbitration, while Senator Luis Anderson, late special envoy from Costa Rica, to the United States, covered Latin-American cases.

President Taft, who is one of the vice presidents of the society, will receive the members at the White House tomorrow afternoon, and the conference will close with a banquet tomorrow night at which Secretary of State Knox, Attorney General Wickersham, Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. R. S. Woodward, president of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, will speak.

NATIONAL AID FOR RIVERS

Senator Nelson Advocates Large Appropriation by Congress.

RAILROADS ARE NOT HOSTILE

Minnesota Statesman Says Improvement of Waterways Will Be Welcomed by Present Transportation Lines.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—(Special.)—The work of the pioneer in the development of the country is no novelty to the railway, but it is a decided novelty in the development of the waterway. The question of waterway improvement has grown with the growth of the nation until it has become a subject for serious consideration, not only on the part of the general government, but by the individual states as well.

for it is only through the hearty co-operation of the federal power, and the state authorities, that anything like a comprehensive policy looking to the improvement of our rivers and harbors can be accomplished," said Senator Knute Nelson of Minnesota, a member of the commerce committee of that body.

"The railroad has had no more reason to fear or to oppose the steamboat than the trolley car. Both have their uses of co-operation and competition. Both are necessary to serve the increasing need of our domestic and foreign commerce. There will be business enough for the railroads at paying rates no matter how much the riders are improved or how cheaply they can carry freight."

Among the men of the senate, who have made waterway improvements a systematic study, Knute Nelson easily takes first rank. A pioneer himself, having gone into Minnesota in 1871, he early became interested in the development of the Mississippi and all its tributaries. And he has contributed much to the literature of waterways, bringing to the subject hard-headed business sense, a tribute to his Norwegian ancestors.

System in Improvements. "I am firmly convinced that our waterway improvements ought to be carried on in a systematic manner and only such improvements should be made as will prove of substantial aid to navigation. I feel that no matter how many railroads we get, waterways will in no wise interfere with the railroads in the movement of heavy and slow freight which the railroads do not "tanker" for. I recall very distinctly when we had up in congress the bill providing for the building of the Lake Erie and Ohio canal and I wondered at that time, having been informed that the railroads were antagonistic to the improvement of our waterways, why the Pennsylvania railroad company would not oppose the bill and I was informed that the freight on the railroads was congested and that the rail carriers welcomed any movement that looked to the lifting of such congestion because the railroads realized that only the heavier and the bulkier freight could be moved to advantage by water.

"I have watched with interest the growth of the movement for a comprehensive plan of waterway development in the United States and a very great deal of the praise for the crystallization of this sentiment is due to the National Rivers and Harbors congress and I feel sure that the agitation begun by this great body of business men was largely instrumental in the appointment of the waterways commission provided for in the last river and harbor bill.

Would Spend Large Sum. "I believe we could spend from thirty to forty millions a year on waterway betterments and I feel that the sum could be taken out of current revenues without cramping the treasury to any appreciable extent. The passage of the last river and harbor bill, which was essentially an emergency bill, providing for new surveys and the completion of surveys already begun, will give the two houses of congress an opportunity next winter to enact a river and harbor bill which will connect up various projects, now under way, for the development of the rivers, harbors and canals of the country. When we consider what Germany, France and even England are doing for their waterways it behooves us to stir ourselves or else we will be found wholly unprepared to meet these nations in the great war of commerce now going on."
