PENSION PLAN FOR RAILROADS

Massachusetts Legislative Committee Drafts Scheme with Some New Features.
The committee on railroads of the Massachusetts assembly has agreed to report a bill for the establishment of the Boston & Maine co-operative pension system, claimed by students of industrial insurance to be one of the most comprehensive plans of the kind ever devised.
The system is the result of the researches of Messrs. Hale and Rich of the Boston & Maine legal staff, assisted by Louis D. Brandeis and other students of the subject. It has been amended considerably in the committee, mainly in the direction of making it conform to its terminology to the requirements of a statute.

The main feature of the insurance plan, however, are left intact.
The matter of acceptance is left to the employees of the road, who are to vote upon the plan as a body. Thereafter every person in the employ of the company is to be a member, except such as vote against acceptance and who afterward file with the president of the road a statement that they do not wish or refuse to become members. All who enter the employ of the company after the acceptance of the plan will become members.
The funds for the pension system are to be provided by the men and the company jointly. Each member must pay an initiation fee of $1, and after the first year, an annual membership fee of 10 cents, while the company must pay each month an amount equal to that contributed by each employee during the preceding month.

The fund so raised is to be known as the expense and contingent fund, while an annuity and pension fund is to be created by a deposit from each member of not more than 3 per cent of his wages, and the company is to contribute such amount as may be necessary each month to maintain the reserve at the figure where it stood on the last day of the preceding month. In addition the company is to contribute in July of each year an amount equal to the excess of the surplus arising from the annuity deposits over the surplus arising from pension deposits.
In addition to the sums already stipulated as the railroad's portion of the general burden, it is called upon to contribute each month an amount such as the trustees determine is necessary to pay current pensions. The fund is to be administered by a board of trustees, three of whom shall be employees, three directors of the road and the seventh a person chosen by these six. The trustees are to serve for a term of three years, except the odd man, who is limited to a single year, unless re-elected.

The mortuary tables and the rates of interest to be charged are to be worked out by the insurance commissioner, the state actuary and the trustees, and the sums to which each class of insured persons is to be entitled are to be decided upon by the trustees and the insurance department.
On the Wrong Side.
Johnnie (to new visitor)—So you are my grandpa, are you?
Grandmother—Yes, Johnnie! I'm your grandpa on your father's side.
Johnnie—Well, you're on the wrong side, you'll find that out.

ONE MAN BUILDS A RAILROAD

Virginia Line Financed and Completed by Standard Oil Rogers.
One of the most remarkable transportation enterprises of the time was inaugurated recently with the opening of traffic of the new Virginia railway, of which Mr. Henry H. Rogers, the well known capitalist of New York, is the owner and president. The road is 42 miles long and extends from Sewall's Point, at Tidewater, near Norfolk, Va., to the town of Deepwater, on the Kanawha river, in West Virginia. The construction cost alone was more than $400,000, over half of which was personally met by Mr. Rogers. The only securities issued to the public were $1,000,000 of 6 per cent notes of the Tidewater Construction company, due in 1913, and $250,000 Equipment Trust 5 per cent serial notes. The fact that a single capitalist put up so large a share of the money expended in creating so long and costly an iron highway is a unique event in railroad history, the usual plan being to raise all the funds for such purposes by the sale of stocks and bonds to the public.
The construction of the new road involved some of the finest examples of engineering in this country, and every improvement known to modern railroad building has been installed upon it. Although the section which it opens up is far from being developed, the road is already assured from its own property of an annual haul of 1,100,000 tons of coal, which will before long be increased to 2,500,000 tons, and the managers figure on earning more than fixed charges during the next three years.

The railway is virtually an east and west line through southern Virginia from mountain to ocean. Its completion makes accessible 1,000,000 acres of the best coal lands in West Virginia, as well as great beds of iron ore. vast virgin forests also are located along the line of the road, there being in one county alone over 50,000,000 feet of standing timber. Moreover, the road passes through fine grazing lands, choice wheat, corn and tobacco lands, and through one of the richest trucking sections of the state. It is expected to be one of the most important factors in the development of the resources of Virginia—Leslie's Weekly.

Its Varied Uses.
Teacher—What does the word "meter" mean, Harold?
Harold—A measure.
Teacher—What do they measure with it?
Harold—Gas, electricity, water and poetry.
