Continuing, the president said:

In my discourse this evening, I have not thought it best to discuss any scientific subject, but to give briefly a resume of the various movements which are today creating so much interest both in the minds of the profession and the public. Movements, which, through education, will bring about not only prevention, relief and cure of disease, but will serve to bring the public to recognize the stitude of the medical profession in its recommendations of sanitary legislation and medical practice acts.

For a National Health Bureau.

For a National Health Bureau. That the government and people of the United States are at lest awakening to the necessity of definite and comprehensive health legislation is quite apparent, as witnessed by the adoption of a plank in the platforms of the two great national political parties endorsing the organization of all existing national public health agencies into a national bureau of health. With both of these political parties committed by their these political parties committed by their platform declarations to advance sanitation, there should be no difficulty in securing a bill in congress in the near future to that effect.

The committee of one hundred, composed argely of the political economists of our great universities, tell us that in the last five years 750,000 people in the United States have died of tuberculosis and 250,000 more from typhoid fever, both preventable diseases.

It is a disgrace to our civilization that up to the present time our government has no department of public health.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington spends $7,000,00 annually on plant and animat health in our country, but with the exception of that which it has spent for the splendid work done by Drs. Wiley, Atwater and Benedict our representations.

Americans physicians, generally, have fought shy of scientific psychoteraphy for a long time. One of the most important reasons is the fact that Christian science exists and we have watched the antics and extravagances of Mrs. Eddy and her schools with disgust, but without any contheir fallacles and absurdities. That Eddy-ism contains some truth, no man will deny. It was Thomas Carlyly, that rugged old Scotchman and orginal thinker who said, and without being questioned, that,
"No system of philosophy, ism or pathy ever existed but that it had some truth in it or men would have not taken it up.
Aside from a few gifted men like Dr. Wier Mitchell the physicians of this country have practiced psychotheraphy without any system or study. It is not until the translation of Prof. Dubois book in 1895, that we became aware of scientific mind

A physician is weighed in the balance as is no other man. Suggestion is a potent means of influencing the sick. For them it is constantly though inadvertiently utilized. There is not a case which will not be influenced for better or worse by the attitude, the cheering words and the smile or the wrinkled brow or brusque manner of his physician. Legitimate use the smile or the wrinkled brow or brusque manner of his physician. Legitimate use ought to be made of such means—it is not charlantanry. It concerns us in our daily practice of medicine and surgery and is a practical study. We need to search further in our ministration not simply for the material, but for the mental and moral cause of disease. I believe there is a great deal to be gained by study and system in these aids. Aids, the average physician has never called in.

Enthusiasts Do Harm. However, I do not believe that psycho therapy is a cureall, and when practiced by an organic disease is overlooked. This criticism applies with special force to devotees of so-called religious cuits and non-medical philanthropists who cannot recognize its limitations. That its field of usefulness is limited and is becoming more so has been rounted out by Dr. Hutchinson. The thoughtful and well trained physician is the control on the cannot will recognize these only one who can and will recognize these ilv one who can and will recognize their mitations. "Something of the necessity of more work n Nebraska may be realized from the fact that tuberculosis causes the death of 600 people in Nebraska every year and shows a financial loss of more than $5,700,000 in wage earning capacity, joss of time and expenses to our citizens.
