royalty who has masqueraded for a time as her honored guest.

Mr. Drew is the same thoughtful chap he has been through all the time he has been delighting the American public by his charming art. He is as careful and painstaking in his ways as if he were yet an ambitious youngster instead of an established leader in his profession.

He delights nothing, and carefully accords to each word, phrase, gesture, attitude or posture the value that fits it into a perfect expression of the whole character.

Miss Coghlan is also a delight; a charming comedienne always, her humor has grown richer with the passage of time, and now bubbles forth a golden stream of unalloyed fun. From the moment she enters during the first act, the personification of the pious-proud snob, coldly snubbing former friends, insulting servants and deliberately making herself as disagreeable as possible to all around her, through the climax of her social aspirations, where she is permitted to present a grand duke to the notables of the county, down to the depth into which she is plunged by the awful disclosure that the celebrity is really a waiter, and her inability to rid herself of him because of the man's impudence in refusing to go, and her impotence because of the scandal that is sure to follow if she does expose him, her course is one of evenly-balanced effort that is excellent from every point of view.

All the way through the company is a splendid one. Mr. Davenport, Mr. Powell, Miss Boland and Miss Prince have the roles next in importance after the leads, and are worthy of the parts, while each individual of the company deserves personal mention for the character of his or her contribution to the whole. It is an indication of the care with which the comedy is produced that several members of the company are seen only in the opening act, while it is supposed to take place in one of the lounging rooms of a big London hotel, and these merely sit at tables and pretend to be served, or wander about and visit at other tables.

The reception given play and players at the Boyd last night must have gratified even those of the company who are accustomed to such demonstration of popular approval.

Despair and Despondency. No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry their daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disordered and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism. IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. Ask Your Neighbors. They probably know of some of its many cures. If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing Common Sense Medical Adviser--revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers, in a handsome cloth-binding, 31 stamps.
