This was to be BOSTON, Mass., May 29 .- Since the mid-Boston public schools has been teaching a class of tuberculous children on the roof of a big brick building in Franklin park, where the winds have a fair sweep, and she declares that if the school authorities ever again try to make her teach indoors she will resign her place.

The name of that organization is nothing less than the Boston Association for the Reitef and Control of Tuberculosis. It done because an examination had shown drive the school to cover.

At first the sick children were placed in camp at Parker Hill about the middle of July, and the camp was not even called a school. There was no physician in attendance, but Dr. Thomas V. Toohey placed himself on call.

There were tents at the camp and an open sided kitchen where wholesome things were cooked for the youngsters, and before the summer ended the kitchen was pretty busy, for those children developed the normal appetites of their age. There was a large tent for a dining room and a shelter in case of storms, but mostly the children played under the trees of an old orchard which covered part of the ground.

Fourteen separate gardens, four feet by seven, were laid out, and two children were set to dress each garden. In the middle of the plot was a common garden at which all worked.

At the end of eight weeks the children had gained from two to ten pounds each and at the end of fifteen weeks the examining physician decided that nine of the thirty-two children admitted might be
