CUDAHY FOR RIVER TRAFFIC

Omaha Packer Joins Chorus of Steamboat Boosters at Kawtown.

SAYS IT WILL BE REAL BOON

Anything that Contributes to the Commerce and Industry of a City Helps, and This is One of These Things.

E. A. Cudahy, vice president and gen eral manager of the Cudahy Packing company, is a friend of the Missouri riverthe tawny, restless, raging flood, which few people in Omaha like, because it rearranges geography, dabbles in real estate and runs around at nights.

In Kansas City, where everyone likes the Missouri river because it is better than the Kaw, after which the city is named "Kawtown," Mr. Cudahy round that everyone who visited the city had to give an interview commending the Missouri river navigation or he would not get good meals. No need in giving tips to waiters or porters if a visitor is "interviewed" in a newspaper and says something nice about the Missouri river without referring to the way it lunches on small villages and parks, picking its teeth with railroad ties and slippery elm snags which it catches in its maw,

This is what Mr. Cudahy is said to have said some time between the hours when he was attempting to get to the city from the bunch of sheds which compose the Kansas City Union depot and the time when he struggled back through the tunnel to return to Omaha:

"Kansas City is a great city, a truly great city; but with the lowering and equalization of freight rates that will come with steamboat traffic on the Missouri river it will be a greater city. Anything that contributes to the commerce and the industry of a city helps, and nothing that I know of will help these cities along the Missouri river more than steamboat traffic."

Mr. Cudahy said he was pleased with the work that has been done this season for flood protection here. "But," he declared, "the work should be kept up until the improvement is an absolute guaranty of protection to all of the industries, the railroads and the other great property interests along the river. "Business conditions everywhere in the United States are improving. We are not a bit disturbed by the cry of the Britishpeople against the American packers. Why, the demand for meat here in the United States is so great that we have cut out our European fresh meat business because it is unprofitable. Some of the other packers are selling fresh meats over there, but we are only sending cured and canned meats abroad. The growing de-
