HAVEL'S BODY IS IDENTIFIED

Brother Views it at Nebraska City and Says It's His.

TOOK LIFE BY RIVER ROUTE

Story of Body Being Found at Gibson is False and Striking Coincidence with That of Recovery.

A body has been taken from the Missouri river at Nebraska City and identified as that of Jacob Havel of South Omaha. This identification clears up the mystery of Havel's disappearance. In any event, the story of his body being found in the weeds near the Burlington at Gibson turns out to be wrong. No body was found at Gibson, and now the mystery is, why did somebody telephone to the relatives of Havel that his body was found there? The coincidence of this report and the recovery of the frontier is being remarked. Havel is said to have left home Sunday in a very despondent frame of mind. Friday afternoon his hat was found on the river bank near Gibson, and last night word was received from Nebraska City that a body which answers closely the description of the missing man was found floating in the river near there and is being held by the coroner of that county.

Brother Recognizes Body.

A brother of Havel left for Nebraska City as he heard that the body had been found, and he identified it without difficulty as that of his brother. It had been in the water some time, judging from its appearance, and the finding of the gold watch in the pocket dispels the theory that he had been robbed and murdered. As he left his home after words had passed between him and his parents, who scolded him for being out late and becoming intoxicated the night before he left, and there are no marks of violence on the body, it has been concluded that suicide accounts for his death. He was 25 years of age and worked last for the Lively Brick company. He attended a party near his home last Saturday night and did not return home till 7:30 o'clock the next morning. After remaining there for a few hours he left and was never seen alive since.

POTATOES VALUED AT JUST TWENTY-NINE CENTS PER

Potatoes have been high in price during the years that Omaha has spent in rising from a little river settlement to a metropolitan city. Sometimes they have gone so near the zenith of commercial booming that nobody but distant relatives of J. Piermont Pocketbook could afford to flavor soup with them. But the "limit" was reached Saturday.

Battling a Witness.

"I will ask you, Mr. Giles," said the lawyer, proceeding to cross-examine him, "do you admit that they were peeping and eyes, were valued at $50 in police court by the judge, who was trying to get even with the world at large for prices he used to see on the grocers' price lists."

Cigar Girl and Cholly Boy Are in Sharp Debate

She Hurls Back His Assertion that His Nickels Are Her Bread and Butter.

Holler when you're hurt.

The Bee printed a story the other day regarding the experiences of a cigar girl with the "cholly boys" who buy cigars and then feel privileged to extend an invitation to dinner or the theater and consider the purchase as the equivalent to an introduction.

The story evidently came close home to someone, as the following communication received through the mail yesterday proves:

"What cigar girl are you in love with? The poor cigar girl, if she knew anything, she wouldn't make a holler. If it wasn't for the cholly boys, as you call them, where would he position? Henceforth we'll buy our cigars elsewhere and avoid the cigar girl. We don't think there is truth in what she says. These editorials don't do you any good."

The cigar girl sniffed contemptuously when she was told of this communication.

"My living doesn't depend on the 5-cent pieces these fellows spend," she said. "They spend a dime and want to throw in a dollar's worth of conversation. They come up to the counter and say: 'Well, I am very particular who I take up with, but you look good to me. Want to go to the show?'"

"Oh, I know all about them," she continued. "There are three kinds who make life a burden to us. There is the young chap on the road for the first time, and who thinks he is a traveling man; then there is the broken down old spot, and there is the fresh young married man, who thinks that because he fooled one girl at the rear of them are crazy about him. "I will give them credit for this much intelligence. They are like tramps who pass around the word among themselves as to which houses will stand for a hand-out and which will not. They pass around the word as to which girl will stand for a jolly and which will not."

"I am afraid," she added reflectively, "that they have written a big 'N. G.' on my front gate."

Where to eat.
