UNCLE SAM'S MEDAL FACTORY

Business of One of the Little Known Branches of the Mint.

CLASS OF WORK TURNED OUT

Unique as the Government's One Commercial Enterprise—Collection of Famous Medals and Their History.

The United States mints conduct a brisk business in the making of medals. It is probably the only commercial enterprise in which the government is engaged. The business is carried on at the United States mints, but is as distinctly a commercial undertaking as any private enterprise. It is a factory for the making of medals and other insignia, and is distinct and separate from the minting of money, the work being done by separate workmen and with different machinery to that used in the coining of the national medium of exchange.

The medal department will not make a die for a private individual. He must prepare this himself, but if he does so and takes the die to the mint he can have as many medals struck off as he is able to pay for, at a reasonable profit on the cost of the metal. This being the case it will be seen that any one can award himself a medal, or decide to present all his acquaintances with one in honor of some event of common interest to them all. Then he can have a die made from the design he has prepared, take this die to the mint and obtain a supply of government made medals done in the very best and most workmanlike manner.

The equipment of the medal department is of the finest kind. One of the medal presses is capable of a pressure of 1,100 tons to the square inch and others between 300 and 400 tons. The standard silver dollar requires only 160 tons, and the double eagle 155 tons pressure. Fraternal society souvenirs can be made by the government in this medal department, and a brisk business is done with organizations, who can afford to have their insignia cut by Uncle Sam's fine new machinery. There are no canvassers out drumming up business for the medal department, and were it more widely known that this work is done by the government it is probable that many more would avail themselves of the opportunity of obtaining mint-made souvenirs than at present.

Collection of Designs.

There is at the medal department of the mint a choice collection of designs to quicken the imagination of the customer and show him how a properly designed medal should look. Also there is a big stock of government designed and government awarded medals on hand for sale to any one who desires them. These medals that are offered for sale are all official, in the sense that they have been ordered and authorized by the government to commemorate some event or the achievement of some individual, and taken together they constitute a valuable index and chronology of the country's history from the earliest times to the present day. Most of these stock medals are of bronze, but if some particular customer who can afford to do so wishes to have one or more made of gold from the same die, this will be done for him to order. If he merely wants a bronze medal he can probably select one from the stock at the mint.

Famous Medals.

The famous Washington medal, "Time Increases His Fame," may be had in gold for $9, in silver at 75 cents and in bronze at 25 cents. The medal is one inch in diameter. The fleet medal, which has been reduced in price from $2 to $1 (in bronze), commemorates the recent circumnavigation of the globe by the battleship fleet. It is an oblong piece, with straight bottom and sides and a curved top over three inches long and two inches high. The obverse shows a portrait of Theodore Roosevelt, designed by C. E. Barber, and the reverse, designed by George T. Morgan, a female figure, standing, waving farewell to the ships as they are strung out in line and making for the far horizon. Beneath this is the inscription: "Hampton Roads, December 16, 1907. Departure of the United States Atlantic Fleet on Cruise Around the World." The list includes a full line of presidential medals from Washington to Roosevelt, which sell for $2 each, but which, it is said, are apt to be put on the bargain list soon at $1 each. They have a uniform size of three inches, the diameter of circular medals being generally given in sixteenths of an inch.

Medals that are historical are those that are given by congress to army and navy officers and to private citizens for deeds of valor. An interesting medal scheduled for the list is known officially as the "Washington Before Boston" medal. It was given to George Washington by congress in commemoration of the evacuation of Boston, March 17, 1776. The design for this was executed by Du Vivier, who was selected by the commission appointed for the purpose by congress, consisting of John Adams, John Jay and Francis Hopkins. It was made and struck in France under the supervision of Benjamin Franklin, then representing this country in Paris. The gold original is now in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical society, to whom it was presented by a citizen who bought it for $5,000. It is 42 in size (2 inches and 10-16) and very properly there is no gold replica of it in existence. The mint in Philadelphia, however, has the die, and the medal in bronze can be bought by any one who wants it for the small price of $2.

Other Washington medals are "Presidency Relinquished," size 25; the "Coin Cabinet Medal," size 37, and "Commencement of Coin Cabinet," size 12, all of them in either silver or bronze, while the "Commencement of Coin Cabinet" may also be obtained in gold for $6.35.

First American Engraver.

The gold medal given to Major Henry Lee (Light Horse Harry) for his gallantry in attacking the British troops at Fort Paulus Hook, September 24, 1779 (size 29), is probably the only medal awarded by congress during the Revolutionary period that was the work of an American engraver. This was Joseph Wright, one of the earliest of the United States engravers and the first diesinker of the United States mint. He also made the dies for what is declared to be the best metallic portrait of Washington ever executed.

Among other medals given to soldiers and sailors of the revolutionary war may be mentioned Major General Gates, for the surrender of Burgoyne; John Paul Jones, for the Serapis, and General Daniel Morgan, for the battle of Cowpens.

A medal with an interesting history was one presented to Count de Flury, a French officer, who was the first to surmount the walls of the fort at Stony Point. It is said that the medal never reached De Fleury, as he had returned home before it could be got here from France, where it was made. A silver medal found at Princeton in 1850 is declared to be the original of the one awarded to De Fleury. The obverse shows a soldier in Roman uniform, standing amid the ruins of Stony Point fort, and on the reverse sailing in the river below it. A battery on an eminence to the right is in the act of firing on these vessels. A bronze copy of this medal can be bought at the mint for $1.25.

Medals for Civilians.

Some interesting medals are to be found in the miscellaneous lot. The fleet medal belongs in this list. Also the Cyrus Field medal for the laying of the Atlantic cable. This was engraved by William Barber, father of the present chief engraver of the mint at Philadelphia. It is a costly as well as handsome souvenir, being listed at $8 in bronze. There are in existence two impressions of the Field medal in gold. The medal intended for presentation to Mr. Field was forwarded to Washington for the inspection of President Johnson, and in some way was returned to the treasury without the knowledge of the custodian. Then it was lost and another had to be struck. Subsequently, some years later, the original turned up.

If any one is interested in the medal bestowed by congress on Joseph Francis for "inventing and framing" the life saving apparatus now used by the government on our coasts it can be bought from the mint for $8. It was designed by Louis Saint-Gaudens, brother of Augustus Saint-Gaudens. Still other medals that can be bought at the mint are of the last five secretaries of the treasury for $2 each; the directors and superintendent at prices ranging from $1.25 to $2 each.

The medallic art, as distinguished from that of metal money coining is a comparatively modern one. The inventor of the medal, as at present understood, is said to have been Antonio Pisanello. The first medal made by him was that known as the "Lionelle D'Este," and commemorates the marriage of the king of Naples to the marquise of Ferrara. It may be added that the designing of medals is not only an art in itself—as some of the great artists who have tried it have discovered—but it is one requiring special technical knowledge of the properties of the various metals used, their behavior under different temperatures and the limitations of size and shape.—Brooklyn Eagle.

For Ways that Are Dark.

The man ran his eye over the casual assortment of cigars in the case at the end of the bar. He was a stranger to all of the brands.

"How's that two-for-a-quarter over in the left-hand corner?" he asked.

"That's a dandy, boss," said the colored gentleman who was officiating as bartender. "It's the kind I always smoke."

This sounded like a dubious recommendation until he added: "When you want to get the best cigar in the house just ask the bartender which cigar he smokes when the boss is out."—New York Times.

NEW TAX HITS THE TRUSTS

Thirty-Nine Big Corporations Will Dig Up About Five Million Dollars a Year.

Based on recent reports of their earnings, thirty-nine leading industrial corporations of the country would contribute approximately $5,000,000 to the government revenues under the proposed plan of levying a 2 per cent tax on net incomes. These thirty-nine corporations would, of course, contribute a comparatively small amount of the money which would be obtained by the government through this source, most of which would come from the great railroad corporations.

Of the industrial concerns, the Standard Oil company would be the largest contributor, paying $1,200,000, according to calculations based on the latest report of earnings available. The United States Steel corporation would come next with $584,967 and the American Tobacco company third with $465,432. The American Telephone and Telegraph company would pay in $362,484, and, aside from the companies mentioned, the annual tax in every other case would be under $200,000. Half a dozen concerns would have to pay between $100,000 and $200,000, and the tax on the remainder would be less than $100,000 each.

These figures are deduced from the statements of earnings mostly for the recent fiscal year, in which heavy losses were reflected from the depression following the panic, and in ordinary times undoubtedly the tax would be much larger than indicated.

The following list contains thirty-nine industrial corporations, together with the balance available for dividends, subject to the proposed 2 per cent tax and the amount of revenue which would be derived therefrom:
