AFFAIRS AT SOUTH OMAHA

Games and Athletic Contests at the Country Club.

SAFE AND NOISY FOURTH. Fire in Stock of Fireworks is Only Accident Reported During the Day—None Injured and Few Arrests Made.

South Omaha, in common with the rest of the middle west, celebrated its Fourth of July between showers making the best of the fickle weather.

The firing of noise-producing devices through the day was continuous and deafening. This was especially true at Twenty-fourth and N streets, where the car tracks were lined with large torpedoes and every boy on the street had a cane or a revolver.

The South Omaha Country club had as much of its celebration as possible. The golf play was conducted according to schedule. The golfers played with holes to qualify for the championship tournament.

The greatest interest was in the qualifying rounds of the golf teams. The field was too heavy for good scoring.

"I Am the Law," Shouts Constable Edgar A. Simpson

Justice of the Peace Court Officer Runs Louis XIV a Close Second.

Let's get 'em! Edgar A. Simpson, constable in the court of Justice of the Peace Bachmann, lays no claim, as did that erratic potentate of France to being the state, but he is running old Louis a close second.

"I am the law," proclaims Constable Simpson, "and I can do as I please." With this declaration he has held possession for two days of the Camera-phone theater at 1408 Douglas street, in spite of a mandamus issued by Judge Kennedy, ordering him to give over the place, and he is now to be charged with contempt of court.

Samuel Silverman, an employe of the moving picture show, got a writ of attachment in Bachmann's court for $109 alleged to be due him as back pay. With Simpson he went to the place Saturday and as they strode up the aisle in the crowded house, Simpson precipitated a small riot by roaring out, "Everybody out, the place is attached."

When the audience had been thus dismissed, the constable and his proteges proceeded to run the show as they pleased. Wells and Rosewater, who are the attorneys for Hanson Krupp, owner of the theater, tried to get Simpson to accept a bond for the satisfaction of his writ of attachment, so they could get back the show for the glorious fifth, but Simpson made his declaration and refused.

Judge Kennedy was prevailed upon, although he was not supposed to be on the bench, to issue a mandamus against the constable. This too, was disregarded by Simpson. Finally proceeding for contempt were brought against Simpson and he was held for the judge by the sheriff.

"Sure, I knew it was a mandamus, said the 'law,' but how did I know that this man Foster was a deputy sheriff? I thought Ed Brady was sheriff of this county. I have to be careful when discharging my duties to see I recognize no persons who have no legal authority."

By the order of the judge he agreed to return the appropriated theater and probably will have charges of contempt of court filed against him by the county attorney.
