THREE connecting rooms, furnished for housekeeping. No objection to children.

-N. 26th St.

The Benson family, consisting of Papa and Mamma Benson and little Frankic, arrived duly in Omaha, where Papa Benson was to be manager of the Bell Telephone company. They went to the Paxton hotel to stay over night, and the next day they started in search of a fiat or furnished rooms. The very first place they went the rooms were lovely and the price just right, but the lady asked them if that was their little boy, and they said yes, and the lady said they could not have any children. So with sad hearts they left and went to another place, with the same result. After trying all forenoon and being turned down on account of the little boy, they decided to buy a Dally Bee and read the want ads. At last they found this ad: "Three connecting rooms, furnished for housekeeping. No objection to shildren. -N. 25th St." They hurried to the place and, finding it very cony and neat and the price moderate, they closed the bargain and were soon settled. Little Frankie felt sorry for the poor widow lady who they now lived with, and he helped her by mowing the lawn and asked his papa for money to buy flower seed and made a nice flower garden and kept the yard so nest and pretty other landlords were attracted by it, and on inquiring found a child had done so well, they all went to the Bee office and advertised their houses, flats and rooms for rent, and all read: "No objections to children," and each one secured a good tenant and all were happy.

If the creek could be diverted and it is believed the scheme is practicable, it would do away with the necessity of bridges and the prospective large expense of replacing the present structures with concrete bridges. By diverting the creek the bed of the stream could be filled in and utilized for a large main storm sewer. This would give hundreds of acres of valuable ground to the owners of property abutting on the creek.
