Current Literature. "The Pulse of Life," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, author of "The Heart of Penelope," introduces us to an unfamiliar world—the reserved, exclusive, distinguished circle of the old Catholic nobility in England today. In this old world atmosphere the last of a very ancient family, Francis Domville, falls in love with a foreign princess and saves her from a convent and an arduous journey which seems more characteristic of the times of Edward VI. than of Edward VII. Interwoven with this love affair is another, outwardly quieter, but more intense, between Domville's sister and a Russian—headstrong, mysterious, tragic figure. And the strong, sure touch of an able writer traces the life dramas of these four, as they live and move among the aristocratic, secluded, intensely individual people of their own set. Published by Dodd, Mead & Co.

An Interesting Little Story

AN OPPORTUNITY. Clarence Levi, age 14, Bill Howard street, Omaha, Neb. Son of L. Levi, eighth grade, teacher, Miss C. Johnson. AUTOMOBILE—Will trade first-class improved ranch property and take in trade automobile, machine must be in good condition and make and in first-class condition and late model. B. G. Brookway, Laurel, Moht. "If I only had some other means of getting to the city except by that old train," said the ruddy old ranchman as he packed his grip before starting for the depot four miles away. As he walked up the road leading to the depot, he saw his ranch in the distance. He had often wondered to himself just what he should do with it, but had never decided definitely. At last he reached the depot just as the 7:11 pulled out for Butte. "My that was a long walk!" he exclaimed, as he took a seat in the rear of the car. "I never thought I'd catch this train." In a few hours the train had reached Butte, and he departed from the depot shaking hands with a few friends as he left. It chanced upon his arrival home next evening he found some friends from Omaha waiting for him. He greeted them cordially, asked them to sit down and tell him about their trip. "My, that was a long walk from the depot!" exclaimed one of the friends. "I had a horse and buggy and then you could ride instead of walk," remarked Fannie. "Oh, I have that," replied the rancher, but it takes so much time to get it rigged out that I prefer walking. "But, how about an automobile?" asked Fannie. "That would just fill the bill," thoughtfully replied the rancher. "But it takes ready money and a lot of it, I expect," he added. "Oh, not exclaimed Anna, you can get them at all prices, and I know my uncle traded a horse for one." "Well, I don't see why you couldn't if you put an ad in the paper." "Yes, I guess I can drop an ad in the Montana Star next"—No! Not interrupted the girls, "if you want to put it in a paper that brings results, put it in The Omaha Daily Bee, the best paper in the west." So the above ad was immediately sent to The Bee, and in a few days the small mail box in front of the house was filled with answers. After some correspondence a trade was made and the rancher became the proud possessor of a big red touring car, and an Omaha man is the happy owner of a ranch which he had been so long desiring. This was all brought about by the common sense and good judgment of the rancher's friends in knowing what kind of paper to put an ad in, and also of the Omaha man who knows that a good paper to read is The Omaha Bee.
