BERLIN LIKE ANCIENT ROME

Transformation of Germany's Capital in Forty Years.

UPLIFT OF UNITED GERMANY

An American Visitor Draws a Pen Picture of the City that Was and it Appears Today.
Writing to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, W. G. Ballantine draws a pen picture of imperial Berlin as it appears today and the contrast it presents with the Berlin of thirty-six years ago, when the writer first visited the city. The new empire was then but a year and a half old, he writes: William the great had invited his neighbors, Francis Joseph, still today Emperor of Austria, and Alexander II, Emperor of Russia, to visit him in his capital and with him review a part of that grand army that had just crushed France, created the new German empire and made him the leading statesman in Europe. All of the great statesmen and soldiers who had participated in those stupendous victories were there—Bismarck, Moltke, Von Roon, the Crown Prince Frederick, afterward Emperor, and the rest. Germany was intoxicated with triumph and thronging with the novel consciousness of unity and freedom and power to realize her ideals.
Nearly forty years of uninterrupted peace have passed and many of those wild hopes have materialized. Agricultural Germany has become covered with factory chimneys. Steamship companies, like the North German-Lloyd and the Hamburg-American line, carry the German flag into every sea. Luxury and splendor abound where simplicity and poverty dwell. Quiet bucolic Berlin has become a cosmopolitan metropolis. It abounds in magnificent monuments to commemorate the men and events of 1871. In front of the imperial Parliament house stands a colossal bronze statue of Bismarck, the man of blood and iron. Across the wide plaza old warrior

Moltke looks at him in marble. Between the two rises the Column of Victory, two hundred feet high, decorated with captured French cannon. From the column extends the broad Avenue of Victory with sixteen white marble groups on each side, representing the rulers of Prussia and the great men of Germany.
Likened to Imperial Rome.
One has somewhat the feeling in walking about in Berlin that a visitor must have had in ancient Imperial Rome. Back of everything, underlying everything, dominating everything, one feels the invincible strength of the army. A single wave of the imperial hand could launch instantaneously a relentless host, every man of whom would know his exact duty. In England traditional policy keeps the army out of sight. In France one sees enough of slovenly red-trousered privates, but rarely an officer, and there is nothing about the French army of today that stirs the imagination. In Berlin stately officers in immaculate uniforms and white gloves throng the streets. The poor sentinals that stand on guard before various public buildings have a nervous time of it and must keep their eyes rolling; for a failure to present arms to any single one of the officers passing in the throng on either sidewalk, or in the crush of autos and carriages going in both directions in the street, means three days in the guardhouse.
Whatever one may say of the folly and wickedness of war, it is undeniable that nothing but the development of the army and the fighting of victorious wars has made possible the progress first of Prussia and then of Germany as a whole. But for the Prussian army, reactionary Austria would still be predominant in a dismembered and impoverished Germany, which imperial France would still be bullying at its pleasure. Still it may be true that the army which was essential to progress so far is the very thing to be got rid of in order to nobler progress.
Russia a Benign Despotism.
Prussia is the most powerful and effective despotism now existing upon earth. It is the most benevolent and benignly paternal despotism that ever has existed in Turkey and Russia the people have been exploited solely in the interest of the rulers. Not so in Prussia. The dearest object of the government is the welfare of the people down to the smallest child. Sanitation, education, public welfare, public pleasure, are scientifically planned and provided and enforced with an intelligence and fidelity astonishing to Americans. Berlin is the cleanest city in the world—far cleaner than Springfield. It has beautiful avenues, parks, flower gardens and public buildings. There are public playgrounds for children. Statues abound everywhere. Art galleries and museums are numerous and free to the public. In the royal opera house the best operas are presented every night in the year, except for a short time in the summer. In the royal playhouse classical plays, often Shakespeare's, are put on in the highest perfection known to histrionic art. Shakespeare, by the way, is played more in Berlin than in any other part of the world. Besides the royal ones there are of course many other theaters and concert halls. Choice orchestral music may be heard whenever one wishes, and at ridiculously low prices. The public schools are examples to the world, and the university numbers 12,000 students, many from America. The shops, hotels and cafes of Berlin do not strike the traveler is inferior to those of Paris.

But the picture which candor compels us to paint is not all bright. This military glory, this luxurious material civilization, this intoxication of national pride, these sensuous delights of music and art are themselves the causes of some of the plague spots in Germany's social life. Whenever there is an aristocracy of wealth there will be dreadful scandals shocking the moral sense of mankind. We know that in our own New York and Pittsburgh. All last year the Berlin papers were full of the terrible Harden case.
The philosophic observer cannot feel that Germany has reached in any department of life a healthy equilibrium. The immense and costly army, the instrument of Germany's rise, threatens economic and moral ruin. The officers are restless, arrogant, dissolute. The poor working people, impatient under intolerable taxation, are fast going into socialism. The Kaiser has had for twenty years a difficult role to play, but until lately he has played it successfully. He saw from the first that Germany could not afford to fight another great war, but must maintain its army. The question was how to keep the soldiers with their blood up and ready for action and how to keep the people quiet under the taxes. His way has been to say something imprudent about once every six months and so fill Europe with a war scare. Thus he put himself into the center of the stage, excited and pleased the army and silenced the taxpayers. But his last periodical indiscretion went wrong and like a boomerang came back and struck the imperial prestige such a blow as it

OWNER OF FOSSIL FARM TAKES SPECIMENS TO EXPO

James H. Cook of Agate Goes to Seattle with Bones of Prehistoric Animals.
James H. Cook of Agate, who is in Omaha enroute to the Alaska-Yukon exposition at Seattle, is the owner of the famous ranch in Sioux county upon which is located the numerous fossil bones of prehistoric animals that have for several years engaged the attention of paleontological societies from all parts of the scientific world.
"The deposits of fossil remains are probably the most extensive in the world," said Mr. Cook. "Most of them lie from sixty to eighty feet below the surface of the earth and are being quarried out. They are all in a state of perfect petrification. The deposit is from three to four feet thick and covers an area of many acres."
One of the most remarkable of the fossils yet found in the "Moropus Cooks," the skeleton being almost perfect. It is an animal whose general body contour resembles the structure of the horse, but with an elongated neck, the head indicating it to be semi-amphibian. The feet are provided with three strong claws each. The animal stood about fifteen feet in height when living. This remarkable specimen is to become the property of the University of Nebraska.
Mr. Cook is taking a number of the fossils to Seattle for exhibition there. His son is now curator of the National Paleontological museum at Washington, D. C., and many of the more valuable fossils have been donated to the government.

S.S.S. PURIFIES BAD BLOOD

Bad blood is responsible for most of our ailments, and when from any cause it becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, trouble in some form is sure to follow. Muddy, sallow complexions, eruptions, pimples, etc., show that the blood is infected with unhealthy humors which have changed it from a pure, fresh stream to a sour, acid fluid, which forces out its impurities through the pores and glands of the skin. A very common evidence of bad blood is sores and ulcers, which break out on the flesh, often from a very insignificant bruise, or even scratch or abrasion. If the blood was healthy the place would heal at once; but being infected with impurities which are discharged into the wound, irritation and inflammation are set up, the fibres and tissues are broken, and the sore continues until the blood is purified of the cause. S. S. S. is Nature's blood-purifier and tonic, made entirely from roots, herbs and barks. It goes down into the circulation and removes every particle of impurity, humor or poison, restores lost vitality, and steadily tones up the entire system. S. S. S. neutralizes any excess of acid in the blood, making it pure, fresh and healthy, and permanently cures Eczema, Acne, Erieter, Salt Rheum, Boils, and all other skin eruptions or disease. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.
