Bathing Suit Models That Reflect Modish Lines of Dress

EW YORK, July 17.-There have been few real innovations in bathing costumes in the last few years. For a time changes came fast and furiously and the old-time flannel and serge costumes made way, not without lamentation and dire prophecy on the part of their wearers, for mohair and silk. But now the ast word seems to have been said upon the theme of bathing suit materials and only in slight details does the suit of one season vary from the sult of the previous

To be sure, there are experimental changes of line. The vogue of the princesse or semi-princesse lines has been reflected in the province of the bathing cosume-reflected, it must be admitted, with only mediocre success.

There are a few models which, while preserving the usual plaited blouse and skirt relation around sides and back, show a continuous box plait down the front of blouse and skirt. This idea has been very satisfactorily developed and looks well enough upon the bather who has a slender figure or wears a bathing corset; but even for this wearer the uncomprom-Ising princess costumes built much on the lines of the loosely fitted one piece princesse trofteur frock is more novel than successful.

Such models are offered in all the shops carrying high class bathing costumes, and uch a model as the one in black silk with soutached yoke and front panel which s illustrated here is rather good looking n the hand but quite the reverse on the vearer after a plunge.

The conservative is always sensible choice in bathing costumes. Good ma-terial well cut, carefully finished, deriving originality from some little novel touch of trimming, but with no spectacular features, nothing startling-so runs the law of good taste in bathing dress.

Of course there are always women at every shore resort, women of more audacity than good breeding, who entertain the rowd by amazing tollettes at the bathing hour. It was not so many years ago that one of the accepted features of the season at a popular resort was the bathing hour appearance of the daughter of a wealthy scarf. New Yorker, and parties were made up each afternoon to go down to tre beach and see what she wore. Even this season there was a daily act of the same sort at a Jersey shore resort, but the fair bat, er this case was an actress, and the amaiing bathing costumes were doubtless and practical. charged up to advertising.

For the gentleweman conspleyousness on the beach, save as it arises from beauty of face or figure, is the last thing desired; but there's no reason why a woman shouldn't look as well in her bathing costume as nature will allow. Black and dark blue are beyond a doubt the most satisfactory colors for the purpose.

Light colors soil too easily and are seliom seen on American beaches, though on the French coast bathing costumes in white and bright colors occasionally appear. Last year a good many brown suits made their appearance, but though becoming to certain brown haired, brown eyed bathers, they did not look so well when wet as the black or dark blue. Check silks, chiefly in black and white, have had some vogue and are shown again this season, but they are harder to keep clean and fresh than the plain color. The checked silk is almost invariably rimmed in black and color or in all black, while the plain toned dark sults are lightened by various gay touches. An entire collar of white, red or light blue may brighten a suit of black or navy blue, or
