HOW A BEE AD HELPED A HOME

By Rena N. Mead, Blair, Neb., aged 13 Years, daughter of F. E. Mead. Blair Central school, eighth grade. Teacher, Miss Anna Cook.

WANTED-Young girl to assist with housework mornings. Phone Harney ----. Mrs. Reome, with her three children, lived in a little four-room cottage. Her oldest child was a girl named Larene, some 16 years of age. The other two were twins, 12 years old, named Faith and Harold. Larene had left school, but the twins still attended quite regularly. Their mother did sawing. She had the rheumatism, so she could not walk or run the sewing machine, but Larene did that part.

Things began to look as though the twins would have to stay at home and Harold try and get work, when one day some sewing was brought with a Bee wrapped around it.

They were looking it over when Larene read the following ad:

WANTED-Young girl to assist with cousework mornings. Phone Harney — Larene thought that would be a good place for her, but her mother said that she needed her too bad. "But, mother," reasoned Larene, "Faith can do the work before school and I will be here in the afternoon to do the machine sewing, and think what a help it will be."

Her mother could not but consent, and Larene applied for the position and got it. The lady was well pleased and thus, besides helping the lady, the little Bee Want Ad helped educate two children.

TEST OF OPEN PRIMARY LAW

Case May Be Brought Soon in District Court.

VICIOUS ASPECT OF THE STATUTE

Attorney Breen Points Out the Places in Which the New Law Falls Far Short of Wisdom.

C. H. T. Riepen, one of the candidates for the republican nomination for county coroner, has about decided to bring a test case in district court to determine the consitutionality of the "open" primary law, the amendment to the primary law adopted last winter by the democratic Should the test case he brought. John

? Breen will argue the law in the matter. Mr. Breen at the last meeting of the Fontanelle club offered his services in arguing a test case, and he and Mr. Rieper have talked over the question, with the result that the candidate has practically decided to take the amended law into court for a judicial opinion as to its constitutionality and conflicting sections.

According to Mr. Breen several defects exist in the amended law, but should a test case be brought it would be argued mainly on the old provision requiring registration. This provision was not repealed in the new law, and the attorney says it is in direct conflict with the general tenor of the amended law. Breen's Digest of the Law.

"The general provisions of the open primary law allow a qualified voter affillating with any or no party to vote for whatever party he pleases," said Mr. Breen. He can not vote for one man on one ticket and other men on another, ticket; all his candidates must be on the same ticket, but after he gets in the booth he can select he party he wants. A provision in the old law not repeated requires voters wishirg to vote in any primary to be registered as to party affiliation. If the law said that voters could register if they wished, it might be another proposition, but it requires them to be registered. This is where the conflict comes.

"If a republican can vote the democratic lcket in the primary, or a democrat can ote the republican ticket in the primary, why require them to be registered as to party affiliation before allowing them to vote in the primary? The law as amended is absolutely void, and I have not the slightest doubt but that it would be knocked out if it was ever brought to the attention of the courts."

Mr. Riepen has hesitated to bring the test case for the reason that he fears people would misunderstand his motive in so doing. "I have been afraid that people would think that I just wanted to kick," said Mr. Riepen, "but if I finally decide to bring this case it will be for the good of the leading to a sort of summer kitchen at the party and the state and to wipe out a law which I believe has no right on the statute books." The "open" primary law would operate
