'You must have a nice father and mother, Lilly," said Irene Grant, Lillian's best friend. "Oh. I have," answered Lillian, "the best in the world." These girls went to a girl's academy just putside the city of Omaha. About fifteen girls attended.

Lillian's watch was admired by all the girls, especially those who had none. But one day a sad thing happened. Irene Grant, who roomed with Lillian, was looking for something on their bureau. The watch was laying under a handkerchief and Irene could not see it, She pushed the handkerchief to one side and, crash went the watch on the floor.

Irene felt very bad about it and said she would pay for having it fixed, but Lillian would not let her.

They went that yery day to the jeweler's to have it fixed. When they got there Lillian asked the jeweler if he could fix the watch for her. He said he could, and she put her hand in her pocket to get her watch, but it was not there. "Where can it be?" exclaimed Lillian, "I must have dropped it. Let us look in here."

But they could not find it and so they Btarted back to the academy.

On their way back they had to go by The Omaha Bee office. "Oh, I know what I shall do," said Lillian. "I'll have an ad put in the paper; that will help me out."

"Oh, that is fine," answered Irene. So they went in and had the above ad put in the paper.

The next day a small girl appeared at the academy door asking for "the young lady who lost the watch.

Lillian came down and the little girl lady who lost the watch."

"Oh, where did you find it?" asked Lillinn.

Well, yesterday as I was walkin' along the streets," began the little girl, "I saw somethin' a shinin' on the walk an' I picked it up, an' it was this watch. An' last night pa he was readin' out loud to ma, an' he read somethin' about someone losin' a watch, an' I showed him this and asked if that letter wasn't L. an' he said yes, but told me to keep the watch. But said I wasn't no thief an' told him I was' comin' out here this mornin'. So I did, an' he's waltin' outside for me. "Thank you ever so much, little girl; I was afraid I had lost it for sure." said Lil-tinn. The little girl started to go, but Lillian stopped her, saying she had someting for her. Lillian ran upstairs and soon came down holding up two dollars, which she gave to her little friend.

"I thank you, ma'm." said the little girl as she went out the door.

"Come and see me again," called Lillian after her.

The watch was taken to the jeweler's again and fixed.

Lillian was very glad they had passed The Omaha Hee office that day, for if she hadn't would she ever have found her little watch?
