WRECK OF NOBLE CATHEDRAL

Historical Building in City of Mexico Suffers from Earthquake. It is sad news that the earthquake shocks in Mexico have rendered the great cathedral, as one says, "practically a mass of ruins." In an architectural way this building constituted the chief glory of Mexico's capital. To command a bird's eye view of the City of Mexico it has been customary for tourists to begin their observations at the Plaza Mayor, the great central square, by ascending the tower of the cathedral, whence lay spread out in its splendidly clear panorama the valley, encircled by an impressive framework of mountains. As seen in the rarified atmosphere, this has been the largest cathedral of North America, and one of the grandest buildings to be seen anywhere, best memorial of the ancient days of Roman Catholic power in Mexico. The edifice, begun in 1574, was nearly a hundred years in process of erection, being completed in 1672 at a cost of little less than $2,000,000, and its symmetrical and reposeful architecture was after the best plans Spain could offer. The cathedral is located on the north side of the city's chief square, is of the form of the cross, 428 feet long, 200 feet wide, and 175 feet high at the central dome, and its massive twin towers rose to an altitude of 200 feet. Solemn was the vast interior effect, though the place of worship had been despoiled of much of old-time splendid interior ornamentation. The high altar was at one time the richest in the world, with its candlestick of gold that one man could not lift, and golden chalice and pyxes studded with precious stones, and the golden centers, crosses and statues that were many of them plundered in the long period of Mexico's demoralization. There are five naves, six altars and fourteen chapels where rest the bones of some of the departed viceroys and great men of the country. There were ancient paintings on the walls—some of them credited to Murillo, and in other days the cathedral was a great treasure house of costly art such as the all-dominant church could command. Once it contained a golden statue of the Assumption, ornamented with diamonds, said to have been valued at over $1,000,000. That the place was rich in history and haunted by memories the most varied, goes without saying, and must be emphasized by the fact that this building, which was begun 236 years ago, occupied the site of the Aztec temple, or temple of sacrifice, up whose steps Montezuma led Cortes, and, taking him by the hand, pointed out the haunted of the "city that never sleeps" to make desolate—Springfield Republican.

Where Men Are Wounded. Once upon a time, many, many years ago, when men and maids used to carry out their courtships in a manner far different from that which obtains today, a bashful suitor entered the town of Ecossuines in Belgium. At a loss for words, he plaited in the darkness of the night of April 30 a white birch tree before the doorway of the house of his beloved one, in order that it might plead the purity of the cause to which the fluttering heart, draining him of equanimity, presented him from doing verbal justice. The next morning, when the damsel arose and found the tree, she knew, by love's unerring instinct, who had placed it there and sent to the bashful youth an invitation to call. The lad sought out the lass, was welcomed, entertained and entertained. Long Police Service

(Continued from Page One.) prised and puzzled and was as innocent as a newborn babe. "What's the matter?" he asked Whelan. "Open the door and come on in, nobody is going to hit you." But Whelan refused to touch the door again and it required considerable diplomacy to bring him to understand the humorous side of the affair. Another time Whelan had a bad cold and went into the cell room to soak his feet in a tub of hot water. Some mysterious person, let us not say it was either of the arch conspirators already mentioned, threw some alcohol through the bars and into Whelan's face. It stung his eyes and Whelan believed that one of the prisoners had sought vengeance on him by throwing vitriol in his face. He sent up a call for help, which brought every one in the station to the rescue, and when vitriol was mentioned the police bureau, at that time Dr. Claudius Dibern, was brought on the run to save the officer's eyes. If possible, when the excitement subsided and it was found that there was no acid and that Whelan was not injured, the latter kicked over the tub of water in disgust and left the station. Another story they tell on Whelan is the adventure of the "little red house," and this became a phrase around the station which Whelan heard morning, noon and night. The other actor in the miniature comedy was one "Sleepy" Hewitt, of much latter-day fame as an adversary of the game wardens who guard Cut-Off lake from sealers. The sleepy one had been arrested on a charge of stealing some carpenter tools, this as far back as 1884. Sleepy had been arrested on a charge of stealing some carpenter tools, this as far back as 1884. Sleepy had been arrested on a charge of stealing some carpenter tools, this as far back as 1884.

Such stories might be written endlessly, but they all show the same things in regard to the character of the man. Fearless, kindly and with a love for a joke and a good word for everyone, Sergeant Michael Whelan will long be remembered by the Omaha police. When he was placed on the retired list and his pension allowed him the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners passed a resolution thanking him for his long years of faithful and efficient service and wishing him a long life in which to enjoy the retirement he so well earned, and every man in Omaha who knows him wishes the same thing—a long life of ease and freedom from care and worry. Mr. Whelan never married, but he was frugal and has accumulated from his pay enough property to provide him an income sufficient, even without his pension, to relieve him from any worry as to a comfortable existence for the remainder of his days. A few days after his retirement he left for Excelsior Springs for a recreation trip and proposes to take things easy and enjoy himself from this day forth. Officer Dennis J. Ryan, who was placed on the retired list of the Omaha police at the same time as Officer Whelan, went on the force July 28, 1889. He served continuously from that date until the first of the current month. He is now 55 years of age with a wife and two daughters. During his service Officer Ryan never rose above the rank of patrolman, but he was one of the best men on the force and was as reliable as any officer that has ever seen service in this city. Chief Donohue says Officer Ryan was one of the best men he ever saw in police service. When sent out to make an arrest he was fearless of any danger that might be entailed in the performance of his duty. He was called before the police board to answer charges of misconduct or neglect of duty but once or twice during his twenty years on the force. Nearly all his years he had an "inside" beat and was for several years detailed to the "tenderloin" district. During his last year on the force he was turnkey at the city jail.

Nance County

(Continued from Page Three.) fidence of the entire people. The two bank buildings are among the very best in northern Nebraska. The First National is presided over by Theo. C. Koch, president, and H. C. Denkmann, cashier, and The Fullerton National bank by Martin I. Brower, president, and W. P. Hatien, cashier. These banks have a combined deposit of $14,000. Fullerton has a population of 2,000 people. Most of the business men own their property and have ample capital for business purposes. This is the result of trade for a large territory and it has a trade out of all proportion to the size of the country. Generally the circle of trade from the country reaches out six to eight miles, but Fullerton draws trade from ten miles to the north, ten miles to the east, for eleven miles south and about twenty miles to the west. This means that about 300 families recognize this city as their trading point, and as the average family spends about $60 per year, it is plain that about $20,000 flows its way to this city from these farms annually. With the modern chaletauqua idea traveling westward, Fullerton was among the first of the smaller cities in the state to establish one. The beautiful scenery surrounding the city has a state-wide reputation and the chaletauqua grounds, consisting of 100 acres, is the "Lover's Leap," form a special feature of attraction. The Fullerton chaletauqua was first started in 1890 under the name of "The Epworth Assembly." A few years later a stock company was organized to manage the assembly and the name was changed to "The Fullerton Chaletauqua Assembly." Those who have watched its growth have seen it develop from a small gathering at the foot of the famous "Lover's Leap" into a modern assembly, to which thousands of visitors come annually to camp amidst the beautiful scenery and enjoy the splendid programs. The chaletauqua is managed by a board of five directors, who are men of influence and have the best interests of the assembly at heart. The park in which the chaletauqua is held comprises about sixty acres of natural oak and ash timber, surrounded by lofty hills, with the Cedar river running near. One of the largest government training schools for Indians is located in this county at Genoa. When the Pawnee reservation was thrown open to settlement one-half section of land and certain buildings were reserved for school purposes. The school has grown from a comparatively small one at that time to its present capacity of 350 pupils. It is considered by the department as one of its best working plants. It operates its own steam heating, electric light and water plants. While the majority of the pupils are enrolled from the Omaha, Winnebago and Santee reservations, located within the state, quite a number of pupils come from Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota, Montana, Minnesota and Kansas. They are carried through the eighth grade work and are taught various useful trades. All pupils attend class room one-half day and devote the other half to the study of a trade or in farm work. The boys are taught blacksmithing, carpentering, shoe and harnessmaking, tailoring, printing, steam and electrical engineering, farming, fruit culture, dairying, etc. The girls are taught the useful things that fit them for good home-makers such as nursing, laundering, dress making, baking and also all special training is given them in cooking and general housekeeping. Quite a number of the larger boys and girls are permitted to work in the homes of farmers and townpeople during the vacation months. Every summer a much larger demand is made for the pupils than can be supplied. Thus it will be seen that education of the Indian youth. Their moral welfare and spiritual training is given every consideration. The school has one of the best bands in the state and an orchestra second to none outside the large cities. What Margie Said. Margie's mother was growing some seeds and explaining how they would come up plants. "Oh yes," exclaimed Margie, "they go to bed babies and get up grown people."
