DENVER WINS IN THE NINTH Practically All of the Hitting in the Latter Innings. DENVER, Aug. 12.—Pueblo got a lead in the seventh inning of a game that had been remarkably free of hitting up to that time, by batting in four runs with five hits. In the eighth Denver began a fusillade against the eighth Denver began a fusillade against the eighth Denver began a fusillade against The runs with no had down. These events practically tell the down. These events practically tell the by batting in four runs with five hits. In the eighth Denver began a fusiliade against Galgano, earning two runs in that inning. In the ninth four hits in order, one a three-bagger, drove in three runs with no hand down. These events practically tell the whole story, as dearth of hitting, mixed with remarkable fielding. Stankard spoiled what inning by running toward first, knocking down the ball and getting it to first in time. Wanson, covering first, muffed the ball. Miller was given first and Corhan drove a fast one almost over second base. Stankard also knocked this one down, got it to Hartman at second, who passed it on to first, completing a double play and preventing a score. When Pueblo opened on Wasson in the sixth, Locke started with a three-bagger, with singles by Weigart, Galgano and Curtis, and a double by Spencer brought in the four runs. Wasson was taken out during the rain of hits, but Adams was at first unable to stop it. Then came Denver's two runs in the eighth and two men were on bases when Maag drove a long fly to left.
