Women's New Fall Suits

In spite of the hot weather, selling on the new fall suits has been brisk. Out-of-town people, and those in the city going to Seattle Exposition and other vacation trips have bought liberally. The new models portray the ultra-fashionable styles that will be in vogue. They have the new long coats; some reaching almost to bottom of skirt. The skirts are cut smooth over the hips and are knee pleated. The materials are fine hard-finished worsteds and wide-wale serges. Every one is lined with famous guaranteed Skinner satin.

GIANT CORN VALE OF JALA

Old Time Brand Raised by Tribe of Mexican Indians.

MUST SEE IT TO BELIEVE IT

Celebration of Corn Day by the Natives a Feast that Runs Back Into the Mists of the Past.

AMATLAN DE CANAS, Tepic, Mexico, Aug. 10—About where the 19th meridian west from Greenwich intersects latitude 21 degrees 15 minutes north is the Vale of Jala, in the Prefecture of Ahuacatlan, Tepic. Its chief town is the village of Jala, and although like Auburn it is the loveliest of the plain, its fame does not rest on its undeniable beauty alone, but also on the fact that there is garnered year after year one of the most wonderful crops in the world—the giant corn of Jala. From immemorial time—ages perhaps before the first phoenician galley, adventuring for traffic, started the unknown coasts of the Iberian peninsula—the aboriginal farmers of the Vale of Jala, whoever they may have been, were wont to gather about the second day of August, as time is computed now, to celebrate the sacred feast of the giant green corn at the foot of majestic Cerroco, that slumbering volcanic presence which yet mutters in its uneasy sleep. And to this day the industrious husbandmen of that fair valley meet for the same purpose on the same day, now venerated and Christianized into "La Fiesta de la Nuestra Señora de los Angeles"—the feast of Our Lady of the Angels.

These same farmers, the Jala Indians, are ever busy about something, and when not engaged in pottering about among their endless crops—for it is a perpetual performance at Jala—they are finding plenty for their adroit hands to do making wonderful plaited leather bridles or busy with some other cunning handicraft which has made them famous in Tepic.

When the Crop Grows.

The great valley of Ixtlan, with the mighty Sierra north and south, is divided into two narrow valleys by the vast bulk of the extinct volcano Cerroco, said to be forty-two miles in circumference at its base, a perfect cone—1,200 feet above the level of the valley—except for the serrated edges of the crater. While extinct in the sense that it is not in violent eruption, this venerable mountain has had an epic history in the ages of the past, as attested by huge masses of trachyte, basalt and lava flung for miles around, and even now it groans and grunts at times and emits clouds of smoke and showers of ashes and scoria, so its neighbors say.

And full well those neighbors, the Jala Indians, know old Cerroco and admire it. They probably worshipped it before the padres came, for they know that the unequalled fertility of their ancestral Vale of Jala is due to these showers of ashes with which it enriches them from time to time, and that their giant corn, found nowhere else in all the land, is a direct gift from it.

This incredible corn needs to be seen to be believed, and it would be a reckless man and one careless of public esteem who would risk his character for veracity by giving accurate measurements made on the ground, both of plant and ears. With much perturbation, therefore, few experimental partly grown ears and minimum sections of measurements made from specimens brought from average field crops were sent to the Agricultural department at Washington, and that institution was so astounded, evidently by the evidence of its own eyes, that it did not recover enough to acknowledge receipt of this prepaid gratuity for weeks after the fact; but bless their dear souls, they did respond after awhile, and, more by token—for generosity is epidemic at times, if not contagious—they did follow the lead and sent a last year's blue book—and it must weigh two pounds if it does an ounce.

All Send Some Back.

They are nice, amiable gentlemen, though, and it is the duty of every expatriated patriot to send some corn back to his fatherland if he finds that he can't come back and bring his shovels with him.

The statement is risqué, speaking of the enormity of the height of the plant, that of an average sized citizen of the corn belt of Illinois, without a stepladder or some other factitious aid, and the stalks bear two or three ears, nearly every one of them.

These stalks are large, very large—never mind how large—and many of the humber folk of the village use them in the construction of their jacals, as they call the huts in which they live, placing them close together in vertical arrangement to form the side walls.

The ears are extremely long and rather small in diameter for their length, and ought to make ideal roasting ears, for there are such ideals if you have been trained right. The grains are enormous and the rows are beautifully filled out to the end. The ears hang down by a long stalk and it is apparent even to an amateur corn admirer that the giant corn of Jala is a type by itself, if not a separate species.

If memory be not at fault, the late Prof. Dool, professor emeritus at the Agricultural college at Ames, Ia., quite an authority, too (and the supposititious discoverer, so some people say, of "Tamy Jim Wilson," as he is lovingly known in Iowa, among many other strange genera and species), held to the theory that corn is a native of certain west Mexican altitudes. If this be true—and who ever saw any wild corn in the United States—why should it not differentiate in its own habitat into a radically different species?

If those versed in such things, but who do not fancy the lone, high trail, muleback, will wait a little while they may visit the Vale of Jala in comfort and see the giant corn for themselves; for Harriman's new West Coast railway is being built as fast as it reasonably can down from Sinaloa and will pass very near to that charming and at present tierra desconocida—the Vale of Jala.

European Impressions of a First-Trip

By Rev. Adolf Eult, Pastor Swedish Immanuel Lutheran Church of Omaha.

NAPLES—The little, pretty land of Belgium has one attraction drawing endless caravans to it from all the earth. It holds the magical field of Waterloo. In Paris you become sensible of the triumph of the great Napoleon, but at Waterloo of his utter defeat. In fact, it was that cultivated farm region that drew me into Belgium rather than anything else. Brussels, the rather splendid capital, where you hear a French with a rather harder ring to it than at Paris, merits a visit, indeed. Yet I imagine that every visitor there carries a restless spirit within him until he can hurry out to Waterloo, a rolling prairie, dotted with good farms and farm houses, and the monument in the center in memory of—not Napoleon's defeat, but of the victory of the allied forces that overthrew the mighty emperor. Wherever I went in Brussels, in the immutable square in front of the superb gothic Hotel de Ville, in the quaint streets of the old town, in the streets, or out in the magnificent horse park, on the heights—everywhere Waterloo was in my mind.

It looks very commonplace out in the memorable field, something like a farm region in Iowa or eastern Nebraska. But never a day, perhaps, passed that the special train out to Brain-Allend does not carry a score, and often hundreds, of visitors to Waterloo. The day I came out, and it was a very warm, dusty, fatiguing one through came and went. A dozen young English schoolgirls of the ages of 10 to 15 listened with rapt attention to one English officer's explanation of the great historical tragedy and triumph. That was "history" on the spot for bright, intelligent school girls. The high mound is crowned by a bronze lion, and our English officer took pains to show the girls that it was a British lion, not a Belgian lion, as the latter curls its tail down and the British lion curls its upward with satisfaction and pride. British always on top, of course.

You leave Waterloo in a strange mood, desirous to do honor to the conquerors of the heartless Napoleon and yet full of sadness at the fall of so stupendous a general and statesman.

One enjoys thoroughly the brisk half-French life of Brussels. You notice the Dutch type to some extent. The long Spanish reign has also left its impress on the Belgian people. Brussels is a very modern city, full of grand public buildings, exquisite stores with a good deal of Parisian elegance to them. The royal palace, finer hotels, the great park, all lie in the hills. There seems to be a quiet, refined spirit here in this delightful capital, and the working people have a thoughtful, intelligent look. Brussels has often been the scene of serious labor troubles, which testify in a way to the independent spirit

SINGLE ARMY FOR EMPIRE

Consolidation of All Troops of Colonies with Imperial Army Plan of England.

LONDON, Aug. 13—One great homogeneous imperial British army, brilliantly trained and equipped is to be the outcome of the imperial conferences on the navy and military defenses of the empire, held at the foreign office the latter part of July.

The plans provide that all troops of self-governing colonies shall undergo precisely the same training as the home regulars. In order to be ready to take places beside the army whenever necessity may arise. Military training colleges are to be established in the over-sea dominions, and there is to be a continuous interchange of officers from all parts of the empire, so as to insure absolute uniformity of organization and training.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

European Impressions of a First-Trip

By Rev. Adolf Eult, Pastor Swedish Immanuel Lutheran Church of Omaha.

east Holland with the chubby, slow, good-natured Dutch, and at Giadbach, on the German frontier—the Prussian customs house officers bursting in on you with military commands, sharp, somewhat cross, forbidding and exacting, but punctual and wide awake. The finest railroad train I have seen in Europe was on this Giadbach-Berlin line. I question very much if we have any coaches in America as ordinary express trains more excellent in appointments than those I saw on this journey. After the little stumpy English, French and Belgian cars these German ones on the Goldbach express were a relief. But you order when you travel in a north German train! "It is forbidden" is a sign that strikes the eye wherever it glances. And there is no "please" attached to a Prussian "Es ist verboten." From the easy Belgians to the commanding, determined Prussians—you never forget the feeling! I was, in fact, very glad to step off from this military train-life and hide myself for a few hours in a room at the Dusseldorf hotel, where we lodged. We poor Americans, with our independent training, rebel against ceaseless commands. Dusseldorf, one of Germany's most beautiful cities, had glorious parks. Your American fairly panted on this hot day for a spot in the lovely, cool green grass in the park near the art exhibition, but no, "It is forbidden" to touch a blade of grass with your independent American foot. Preferring to obey Prussian laws and still American, do-as-you-please desires, I rested content with a good look. The German parks were created to look at, not to touch. "It is forbidden." All through the Prussian empire, but especially in north Germany, where the German life has a sterner, stiffer and more exacting tone than in the south, you feel this military spirit in things great and small. Yet, mark you, this very hard, somewhat rude and unsympathetic Prussian spirit has had
