One Way to Stop Car Beside Having Conductor Do It That Way is to Run it Down and Grab Hold of the Trolley Rope.

There is more than one way to stop a street car if the conductor is so rude he won't wait for your wife. Mr. and Mrs. Mark Coad faced forth from their residence on South Thirty-fifth street the other evening bound for the Field club. They made their way via Leavenworth street toward Park avenue, and half a block away saw a west side Hancock park car headed in the desired direction. Coad sprinted and caught the car at the bend. Mrs. Coad was not far behind. But the conductor rang his bell twice and the car started. "Wait a minute," Mr. Coad cried in vain. When he saw that the conductor would not hold the car he was furious. After the car he sped, and half way up the block he caught up with it. The car did not stop. Thereupon Coad caught hold of the rope which comes down from the trolley pole and pulling on it, he promptly had the car stalled. "Let go of that rope," yelled the conductor. "Mr. Coad stood pat and waited for his companion, meantime exchanging a few pointed remarks with the street car employe. That person intimated that he would come to the back of the car and do violent things to the man holding the rope. Coad invited him to come on. Then the conductor got contrary and decided he would not. Finally Coad decided he had made his point and held the car until his position was vindicated so he let go of the rope and the car went on.
