HOW IT FEELS TO FLY HIGH

New Mental and Physical Experience Described by a Participant.
AVIATOR TELLS OF THE THRILLS
In First Stage of Learning One is Oppressed by the Feeling of Helplessness and a Fear of Danger.
Thomas S. Baldwin, inventor of the United States military dirigible airship, describes in World's Work the thrills of flight as follows:
"Flight is a new mental and physical experience. It transposes one to a world of action and emotion in direct contrast to much of what one feels and lives on the hard surface of the globe. It tends to exhilarate and exalt the mind; it changes the registry and the workings of a number of the human senses; and it breathes into the body an overflowing measure of health endurance and power. The feeling of triumph over the forces of the air, in the face of Nature's expanding majesty and mystery, is one of the most irresistible charms that have ever taken captive the human imagination. Triumphant flight thrills one with the feeling that his powers are something more than human, more than man.
But in the first stage of learning how to fly, one is oppressed with a feeling of helplessness and a fear of danger comparable to that of a child learning to walk. The aeronaut must train his mind to fly before he can get his airship to work.

There are plenty of mechanics who can build airships that can fly. The great trouble is that there are very few men who have the gymnastic gift to fly; for flight, until it is completely mastered, is a terrific struggle with both mental and physical gravity, or the habits that gravity has imposed upon the mind and body, on the earth plane. If one will study closely the accidents that have overtaken airships in actual flight within the last year or two, he will see that most of them have been due more to a lack of skill in manipulation than to defects in construction of these craft.
When one begins to feel at ease on an airship as on a speeding railroad train or steamship—and it is surprising how soon that feeling comes with successful flight—the elimination of the force of gravity affects the habits of gravity. The mind's freedom is denoted by an enormous increase of energy and power of action. After spending a few hours at an altitude of two miles in an airship, I have felt as if I could walk on naked space with all the steadiness I walk on the street, or that I could step from cloud to cloud as I have stepped from stone to stone in the bed of a shallow rivulet. In every atom of my mind and body I felt the capacity and power of flight. My feet seemed barely to touch the deck of the ship. At three miles in the air I have put one of my feet out on the sea of space, or let my body hang well over the side of the ship. Instead of a feeling of dizziness and a fear of falling, as from a high building, I experienced a feeling of buoyancy like floating on the water. When this feeling in its full power had possession of me, I never had a serious accident.

I recall that, making a short experimental flight with a dirigible about a year ago at Poughkeepsie, the propellers were caught in some rope as the ship rose. It at once shot up at a surprisingly high altitude and sailed off for about two miles to the south. All this time I had been working to get my motors to operating property. Of a sudden the ship halted in the teeth of a contrary air current, and began to whirl like a gyroscope. I had been caught in an infant whirlwind which seemed to be more violent overhead. I could throw off some ballast and go up with balloon power and escape, but I felt the sport of real flight. If my blood and I determined to disentangle my propellers connect the machinery and get out of this whirlwind by motor-power, if possible. Amidst the indistinguishable mass of whirling ropes and spars and beams and the continuous roar of the wind on the gas bag, as loud as the loudest thunder, I finally got the propellers free and the motors connected.
But no sooner did the blades begin to spin than the ship made a dive downward at an angle of almost 90 degrees and the prow was headed directly for the top of an oak tree on the edge of the ground, about 50 yards away. If my ship should be wrecked on that tree, it would not only be a serious financial loss, but a far more serious loss—the loss of all the self-confidence I had gained in long years of experience in the air, because I felt from the moment that the ship began to descend I held it firmly in my grip. It was moving at terrific speed. I pressed gently on the lever of the planes and the ship instantly obeyed. I have not words to describe my thrill of power and triumph when I felt and saw the ship in its headlong flight. I apparent destruction yielding to my will, I held firmly in the hollow of my hand the power to overcome gravity, and for the first time I made several daring circles around a tree.

The aeronaut brings a measure of this power from the heavens down to the earth with him as he alights from his ship. After a long voyage one touches the ground with the feeling that he can step over tall buildings, leap broad rivers, and fly from place to place. This apparent lightness and buoyancy remain in the very bones for many hours after one has made a protracted aerial voyage, and lures one back to the height of the air. It is a sensation of pleasure that the great majority of humanity has yet to know.
BY ESMERALDA, GYPSY QUEEN
Mr. MacBlink Has His Fortune Told and Thinks He Got a Lot for a Cent.
"Well," said Mr. MacBlink, "I've had my fortune told by Esmeralda, the gypsy queen, the swarthy beauty who sits in a chair and looks like a life-size doll in a big glass case at the door of the photograph parlor.
"All you have to do is to drop a cent in the slot and Esmeralda does the rest. She looks down upon a layout of cards spread upon the table before her and scans them slowly from left to right, slowly and very seriously; evidently your case is one that interests her deeply; and then she sits up again and out through an opening in the lower part of the machine pops a card with your fortune all printed on it to the extent of 150 words, with a picture of Esmeralda on the back. And what does she tell me in this look into my fortune? Why, here is her first sentence:

"Your future welfare depends a great deal upon yourself."
"Wisdom in that isn't there? In fact how very true it is! When I came to read it over a second time it struck me that it might apply equally to almost anybody else, but what of that? I felt that I had already got my money's worth; it was worth cent to be reminded that if I expected to get anything I must work for it."
And now let us see what Esmeralda says in sentence No. 2.
"Your guardian angel has three times been on the point of bestowing good fortune upon you, but your own disposition has prevented."
"True again, according to my best recollection; and all I care to say further about this is that I hope my guardian angel still has an eye on me and that he will come my way again. I wouldn't want to say it to him, but I don't mind saying to you that the next time he comes around within reaching distance I shall endeavor to fix my clutch on him good and strong."
"But I may not do that, for most of us are too dumb, lazy or too sluggish to seize an opportunity even when one comes up and wants to spar with us. No doubt in that last clause of sentence No. 2, but your own disposition has prevented." Esmeralda has stated what is true as a general, indeed as a steel-reinforced concrete proposition, applicable to most of mankind, but I don't feel that she has got so near to me anyway in her sentence No. 3, which reads:

"As soon as you cultivate a good, kind disposition the good things that you desire will be yours."
"There I think the gipsy queen has done me a slight injustice. I certainly am good and I mean to be kind. If goodness and kindness could have benefited me any I ought to be more than rich by now. In fact, I think that that's what's been the matter with me, mostly. I've been too good and too kind, too easy. Esmeralda certainly slipped a cog there, but let's pass on and see what she says in No. 4:
"Born under the seven satellites of Saturn, you are indeed in luck."
"Let us hope so. I am not up much in astronomy, but I am willing to believe that there's luck in being born under the seven satellites of Saturn. I should think there ought to be, and whatever it is, I hope it will come along soon. Perhaps it's coming in the form set forth in the gipsy queen's very next sentence, her No. 5:
"One will die that you have never seen, but who will give you up all his earthly possessions, and the amount of money is large."
"Now that begins to look like business, and she says the amount of money is large. All right. I wouldn't want anybody to die just to oblige me, but if he must go and should leave his money to me, why I'd take it. There's a case where my goodness and kindness would work to my advantage."
"In her next sentence, No. 6, Esmeralda says:
"Beware how you invest it, and above all things keep away from gambling, or you will lose all."
"Don't let any forebodings about that disturb you, Esmeralda. I'll put that money where it will be very safe. And how near what she says in No. 7.

"Your lucky star will be bright when you marry, and your wedding will be the happiest in your family."
"Er—m—m. Esmeralda is a little off again there, where she says 'when you marry,' because, really, I was married quite some time ago, but she's quite right again about the happiness of my married life."
And then in No. 8 she tells me:
"Beware of the woman with dark hair that writes to you."
"All right, Esmeralda, I'll look out for that, too. And then in No. 9 the gipsy queen tells me, finally:
"Your lucky day is Thursday and your lucky stone is opal."
"And altogether it's a good deal to get for a cent, don't you think?"—New York Sun.
Adaptation.
"Miss Prim is very particular about having everything appropriate. She even carries this idea into her exclamations."
"She does?"
"At least I suppose so. The other day I told her that Miss Pety, of whom she has a very poor opinion, had offered to make me some straw for the fair, and what do you think she said?"
"What?"
"Oh, fudge!"—Baltimore American.
Patent Currysoms.
"Have you got any Currysoms patent currysoms?" asked Farmer Fishback of a Billville merchant the other day.
"I don't know," replied the storekeeper. "I've got several kinds. What sort is the 'Georgia patent'?"
"It's made with scallions so it will fit in the year."—Atlanta Constitution.
