WOMEN AND PRESIDENT'S VISIT

One Complains that the Fair Sex Are Given No Part in the Entertainment of the Taft Party.

The Prude.

The Hollyhocks stand in a stiff, prim row,
Lining the garden walk;
The Bachelor Buttons behind them grow,
But higher on their stalks the Hollyhocks blow,
Nor look behind them because they know
How folks are inclined to talk.
So the Bachelor Button swings to and fro,
Ignored by the Hollyhock.

Country club golfers are in a query as to what to do with their golf course, and the women no longer play in their red sweaters, since the cows have been turned out to graze on a forty-acre tract, which is part of the course. Many quick turns were made in the mix-up last week, when the club decided not to buy, the owner leased to a milk man, cows were turned onto the links, and finally the court decided that the cows must be kept off. Members of the club are hoping for a settlement of the difficulty so that they may know what to expect next year in the way of a golf course.

The men seem to be receiving all of the honors as hosts for the entertaining of President Taft, who will be the guest of Omaha September 20. Some of the women object to being left in the background, as is shown by the following letter:

"To the Society Editor of The Bee: I would like to know if President Taft is president of the United States or only of the men of the United States. What about the women? Are they to be neglected completely and utterly in this visit of the president to Omaha, soon to come, or will they get their rightful share of the entertainment?

"Even the narrow-minded people who refuse to admit that woman has any brain at all give her at least some authority in the domain of hospitality, in the sphere of entertainments. What then of President Taft? Are we to have no part in displaying to him what Omaha can do? Are the men of Omaha ashamed of their wives and daughters and sisters?

"Last year he spent half an hour at the Women's club, not much perhaps, but certainly much more nearly our deserts than a complete and ungentlemanly ignoring, such as we are getting now.

"A WOMAN."

Omaha and vicinity have more bright children than any one realizes who does not come in contact with them. A little girl at Fort Crook is known for her original sayings. Recently her mother told her that there was a mouse in the play room, whereupon the child asked: "Mamma, will it eat my dolly?" "Why, no, dear. What makes you think so?" replied the mother. "Because my dolly wears a cheesecloth dress."

A little girl who lives in the west part of town, is some times bothered with little friends who come to see her, when she is planning to go some place else to play. She has plenty of ingenuity and quickly found a way. She looked out of the window and saw her pet goat and she knew that he would go after anything that was in front of him, if some one would pull his tail. So the little hostess took her little playmates out on the lawn and as Billy stood facing the children, his tail was given an unmerciful jerk and the children started for the house screaming. They were rescued by a big brother who held Billy's horns until he had calmed down a bit. About a week later the same little hostess had guests again, which interfered with her plans for the afternoon, so this time she locked her little playmates in the play room and went off for awhile, carrying the key with her, but soon she became a little frightened when she heard the children crying, so in haste she tried to unlock the door, but the key would not work, so a hammer was tried, but this was fatal as the key broke. The big brother was called into commission again and had to carry the little guests out through a window and over a roof. This original little hostess has had but few callers recently.
