Quaint Features of Life

Big Bird a Game Fighter.
 N. A. terrific battle with an immense blue heron near Burlington, N. J., three men came off victorious, but not until the big bird had with its powerful wings and vicious beak thrice driven off the trio. But for the fact that a heavy steel trap, into which the bird had stepped while seeking a dinner in the pond of the pond, had been set in the path of the bird, it would have been a different story. The bird accepted the challenge. When the second child had been born to Small Horse and Wining Antelope the latter fell in love with an Indian in Nebraska and married him. Feasting that she might also claim the children by Small Horse, an agreement was signed by her giving the children to Henukaha. This settlement was agreeable to all parties concerned, but the local authorities intervened and brought out the strange defense found in the Bible, with Henukaha's comment: "It is the white man's religion; it is good enough for me."

Boy Foretells His Death.
 A remarkable case, in which Lawrence Rohrbach, a 16-year-old boy, is believed to have had a premonition of death, which was verified, is reported from Gilead, Pa.

Passing of a Heavyweight.
 Mrs. John F. Hum, wife of the president of the village of Grayling, north of Standish, Mich., died in that town recently. She was the largest woman in northern Michigan, and the largest in the state, as far as is known.

 announced with that explosive energy of his, and he did.

Work Doing Vacation.
 Mr. Harriman found it extremely difficult to take a real vacation. Even when he formally stopped work and sought rest his active mind was still at work on plans over to others at the doctor's orders he spoke of it with deep regret. Mr. Harriman had a sense of humor as well as supreme confidence in himself. Once a newspaper that had made some bitter editorial attacks on the railroad's methods sent a reporter to ask him who, in his opinion, were the greatest two railroad men in the world.

"I'm one," he flashed back, "and the other, in his own estimation, is the editor of your paper."

Just before the big drop in stocks, two years ago, a friend who had just returned from Europe dropped into Mr. Harriman's office to see him. The conversation turned on the market, and the friend said that he thought he would buy some stocks. Harriman swung around in his chair, focussed his heavy glasses upon the other's face and said, quizzically:

"Have you any money?"
 "Yes," said the friend.

"How much?" said Mr. Harriman. The friend told him. Harriman was silent for a moment, then he turned and looked across the street toward Trinity cemetery. With an abruptness that seem'd to astonish the subject he said:

"Do you ever read the Bible?"
 "Yes,"

"Familiar with it?"
 "Yes."

"Well, that fellow who went and hid his talent may not have been the fool he has always been credited with being. There are times—". It was enough. The friend hid his talent.

Mr. Harriman was once asked what he thought was worth while in this world for a man to do. His reply was:

"My idea is that a man should try to make his children better, give them larger opportunities, do what he can to make the next generation a little better off than this one."

On one occasion Weston, the elderly pedestrian, had started for an over-continental walk. It breezed into the mind of some traveling editor to canvass the successful business men of the country who had passed the prime of life and ask them if they thought they could accomplish such a journey as the one Weston had set out upon. A reporter reached Mr. Harriman and propounded the question to him. Mr. Harriman looked at the man for a moment and then snapped out:

"Yes—if I put my mind on it."
 Mr. Harriman did not believe there was much of anything he could not do if he put his mind on it.
