Harriman at Arden, N. Y. September 9, 1999, we have leat an able leader and a valued friend. Notable among many such distinguishing acts stands his pension system for those who have aged in loyal service of the properties he directed. American born, he loved this country best, and believed in the people of the west and they in him. The west has profited most by his genius. Wherever he concerned himself is found a splendid work of development, some of which is now left for other hands to finish. His well directed effort in the field of transportation has bettered the service of public utilities, made safer those who invested with him and helped thousands of men into better places and their families into better. "I have personally given the question of the right training of employes and officials much study and consideration and believe Falls Sixty-Five we now have evolved a scheme which will appeal in its practicability to all," said Mr. Park.

"An important exacutial of the successful conduct of any business, including that of a railroad, is harmony and cooperation; Clyde N. Horn, Carpenter, Gets Leg thereafter as much efficiency as it is possible to command. In evolving the education bureau the problem has been to retain the voluntary loyalty of every indi vidual in the service; to then give them stepping stones by which they might surmount the difficulties ahead and make up for the deficiencies of education caused by taking up the serious work of this life at leg and slight internal injuries. immature ages. If a certain position requires both technical and practical knowledge, the race is equal; the college man can get the practical work and the other the technical. The technical man will have a disadvantage after the start has been made, but he has a formidable competitor in the earnest, serious application of the practical man at the beginning. The latter expects no favors; he hews out his own path; his ambition and ideals are, perhaps, not quite so high, but he unconsclously makes himself a necessity-an inseparable part of the machine, as it were which cannot be dispensed with, and which, of itself, naturally pushes him forward.

The technical man is apt at first to underestimate that which is required of him; he does not always fully appreciate the importance of his assignment; his air of superiority unconsciously exerted, perhaps, frequently makes for him hidden enemies, who give wrong information or poor advice. It, therefore, requires a strong individual character to surmount the difficulties and command the respect of his fellow workers. When this is in evidence he can go much higher than the practical man.

The fundamental reasons for establishing the educational bureau of information should be kept well in mind: "First-To assist employes to assume greater responsibility.

Second-To increase the knowledge and Third-To prepare prospective employes for the service.

The meeting was attended by over 100 or the operating officials of the Union Pacific insluding apperintendedts, assistant superintendants, trainmasters, division engineers, assistant division engineers, signal supervisors and agents from Omaha, Council Siuffs, Kansas City, Ogden and Denver.

We have always kept in touch with him and have never known of his doing a crooked thing We do not believe that he is in the slightest degree guilty of this crime. I shall stay here until after the trial and will assist in his defense in every way, as will all of the family. We shall make a hard (ight for him. Golden was formerly engaged in th
