IN THE LAND OF BIG GAME

Hunter Roosevelt's Story of Trip Into Darkest Africa.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE COUNTRY

Ride Through Naturalist's Wonderland, the Sanctuary of Birds and Animals—Hunting the Wildebeest.

The first installment of Theodore Roosevelt's account of his hunting trip into the "Dark Continent" appears in the current Scribner's, under the caption, "African Game Trails." The main facts of the story have been told briefly in dispatches from the haunts of the hunting party, but they are embellished with the impressions of the author, which give a characteristic dash to the recital.
Mr. Roosevelt writes, in part: The day after we landed we boarded the train to take what seems to me, as I think it would to most men fond of natural history, the most interesting railway journey in the world. It was Governor Jackson's special train, and in addition to his own party and ours, there was only Selous, and we traveled with the utmost comfort through a naturalist's wonderland. All civilized governments are now realizing that it is their duty here and there to preserve unharmed tracts of wild nature, with therein the wild things the destruction of which means the destruction of half the charm of wild nature. The English government has made a large game reserve of much of the region on the way to Nairobi, stretching far to the south, and one mile to the north of the track. The reserve swarms with game; it would be of little value except as a reserve; and the attraction it now offers to travelers renders it an asset of real consequence to the whole colony.

On our train the locomotive was fitted with a comfortable seat across the cowcatcher, and on this, except at mealtime, I spent most of the hours of daylight, usually in company with Selous, and often with Governor Jackson, to whom the territory and the game were alike familiar. The first afternoon we did not see many wild animals, but birds abounded, and the scenery was both beautiful and interesting. A black-and-white hornbill, feeding on the track, rose so late that we nearly caught it with our hands; guinea-fowl and francolin, and occasionally bustard, rose near by; brilliant rollers, sunbirds, bee-eaters; and weaver birds flew beside us, or sat unmoved among the trees as the train passed. In the dusk we nearly ran over a hyena; a year or two previously the train actually did run down a lioness one night, and the conductor brought in her head in triumph. In fact, there have been continually mishaps such as could only happen to a railroad in the Pleistocene!

Impressions of the Game Country.
Next morning we were in the game country, and as we sat on the seat over the cowcatcher it was literally like passing through a vast zoological garden. Indeed no such railway journey can be taken on any other line in any other land. At one time we passed a herd of a dozen or so of great giraffes, cows and calves, cantering along through the open woods a couple of hundred yards to the right of the train. Again, still closer, four waterbuck cows, their big ears thrown forward, stared at us without moving, until we had passed. Harlequins were everywhere. One herd was on the track, and when the engine whistled they bucked and sprang with ungainly agility and galloped clear of the danger. A long-tailed straw-colored monkey ran from one tree to another. Huge black ostriches appeared from time to time. Once a troop of impalis, close by the track took fright, and as the beautiful creatures fled we saw now one and now another bound clear over the huge bushes. A herd of zebra clattered across a cutting of the line not 100 yards ahead of the train, the whistle hurried their progress, but only for a moment, and as we passed they were already turning round to gaze. The wild creatures were in their sanctuary, and they knew it. Some of the hunters have at times grumbled at this game reserve being kept at such size, but surely it is one of the most valuable possessions the country could have. The lack of water in parts, the prevalence in other parts of diseases harmful to both civilized man and domestic cattle, render this great tract of country the home of all homes for the wild creatures of the waste. The protection given these wild creatures is genuine, not nominal; they are preserved, not for the pleasure of the few, but for the good of all who wish to see this strange and attractive spectacle, and from this nursery and breeding ground the overflow keeps up the stock of game in the adjacent land, to the benefit of the settler to whom the same gives fresh meat, and to the benefit of the whole country because of the attraction it furnishes to all who desire to visit a veritable happy hunting ground.

and after a run of six or eight miles that he finally ran into and killed the tough old bull, which had turned to bay, snorting and foaming its horns.
Meanwhile I managed to get within 300 yards of a herd and picked out a large cow which was unaccompanied by a calf.

Again my bullet went too far back, and I could not hit the animal at that distance as it ran. But after going half a mile it lay down, and would have been secured without difficulty if a wretched dog had not run forward and put it up; my horse was a long way back, but Pease, who had been looking on at a distance, was mounted, and sped after it. By the time I had reached my horse Pease was out of sight, but riding hard for some miles I overtook him, just before the sun went down, standing by the cow which he had ridden down and slain.
