ROVER IS CLEARED BY HIS GOOD OLD HONEST FACE

Dog Condemned by Neighbors Acquitted When He Appears Before the Judge. The judge and a large number of the pectators had decided that Rover ought a be killed. Several very competent witnesses had testified that Rover was the crossest of dogs. Apparently he had bitten a large number of his master's neighbors the Eighteenth and Cass streets district. and for no cause whatever. His master, however, whose name is H. B. Kennedy, could not bear the thought of losing his pet of years. "Please, your honor, may I bring Rover n, so that you can see him?" "I should say not," exclaimed the judge, if what these people say is true, don't bring that dog near my shins." "But it is not true, Rover never purposely harmed anybody in all his life." Mrs. Kennedy protested, "and if you could ee hlm, your honor-

"He'd chew me up, I suppose." Several speciators feared that the judge was wavering, and showed an inclination o climb upon the chairs. This was restrained, however, until the judge signed to an officer to bring in the dog. At that, those next the alsie shifted uneasity, blushed, and gathered their feet under their chairs. And then came Rover.

alfo had been a beautiful Scotch Collience-but that was years ago. He was very wabbly on his legs and his tongue trooped from jaws nearly toothless, but in his eyes there was a gleam of mischief which a look of innocence, palpably asumed, could not conceal. "Did that dog bite you?" asked the udge of a witness. "He-he mouthed me, anyhow," he answered sheeplahly. "I guess all of you have been mouthing me; take Rover home; you're a good dog, aren't you Rover." Rover wagged his tall, and seemed to grin.
