The ceremony of coronation over, the governors, each with a princess on his arm, ascend the dais and how their respects to their majestles. The trumpeters sound another call and the people strain their eyes o see what new surprise is awaiting them. From all parts of the hall army officer: glittering with gold lace, assemble in the center of the floor and led by the chief knight-at-arms, General Morton, they march to the throne. Taking the hand of the queen they all pay their respects and then descend to the dancing floor each with one of the ladies of the court for the grand march.

As the orchestra changes from the grand march to the swinging waltz the dancing floor is alive with couples. The grand ball in honor of King Ak-Sar-Ben XV and his royal consort has begun.

On with the Dance!

The beauty of the ball scene was enhanced by the presence of hundreds of officers in the dress uniform of blue and gold lace. These gave a touch of color which heightened the effect made by the usual black of the civillan's dress suit.

Among the public officials from out of the city were Governor Ashton C. Shallenberger and Senator E. J. Burkett who occupied a box.
