At the Theaters

"Mary's Lamb" at the Boyd. Richard Carle and company in "Mary's Lamb," a musical farce in three acts, by Richard Carle; adapted from the French farce, "Madame Mongodin." The principals: Alan Townsend, an artist. George Bogues "Bill" Blackwell, from Idaho. Sylvain Langlois Clyde Wetherbee, a secretary. Abbot Adams Sylvester Q. Nightingale, a servant. Miss Julia Ralph Phyllis Atwood, her niece. Miss Violet Seaton Sylvia Montrose, a retired actress. Mercedes, her maid. Miss Helen Brandon Wrennie, a Dutch girl. Miss Helen Brandon Florence N. Gale, a heady nurse. Miss Rita Stanwood Leander Lamb, a martyr. Richard Carle "Mary's Lamb" is a gentle, docile little creature in Mary's presence, but aspires to be a raging lion when Mary is not in sight. And out of the aspiration of a sadly henpecked husband to be a regular Flirty Gerty, Richard Carle has built a farce, with musical accompaniment, that is furnishing considerable amusement for the public these days. Aside from Mr. Carle's personal contribution, the piece has considerable that is of interest. First of all, it is worth the while of a first-year medical student, or other person interested in the study of anatomy, for it affords an excellent idea of how the outlines shown in the books are filled out by nature. Mr. Carle has to use glasses to see, even on the stage, which fact justifies the supposition that he picks his chorus by instinct. However that may be, he has never failed when it comes to landing the plump and shapely ones. In all the lot he has on exhibition now not one but will pass muster, even under the closest inspection, and several of them are called on to show with what perfection of form nature has qualified them. The dancing of others is not such a much from the standpoint of terpsichorean achievement, but for the exhibition of limbs that are slender and shapely it could scarcely be improved upon.

Of course some other things enter into the makeup of the evening's program, such as songs and comedy and a little horse play by the star, who gyrates and oscillates and does a number of ludicrous things in his own peculiar way. Miss Seaton sings very pleasingly, her tones being pure and sweet, but not very robust. Miss Rafter has a song that is really the hit of the evening, the chorus being accompanied by some shadow pictures that are a novelty and of which a large part of the audience apparently could not see enough. Mr. Bogues has a tenor of great strength, which he uses as effectively as his songs will permit, and Mr. Langlois sings "I Idolize Ida" in a spirit worthy of a better song.

The story of "Mary's Lamb" has to do with a henpecked husband, who starts a flirtation with an actress and is caught by his wife. Just when things look blackest for him he discovers that once his wife flirts a little herself, and that the story he has told fifty-seven times to illustrate her indomitable virtue is only partly a recital of facts. With this knowledge he turns the tables on her. The wife role is made most important by Miss Rafter, who pulls her Lamb with a rod of stiffest steel till his turn comes. Mr. Carle is the lamb and Miss Rafter the actress, who gets him into trouble to feed a little private grudge. The other characters are merely incidental. The piece is well mounted, although scenery and costumes alike show the effect of long usage during the period of popularity the piece has enjoyed in New York and Chicago.

The Boyd was packed last night by an audience that manifested its approval and pleasure in the most noticeable way. One of the most enjoyable stunts of the evening was the absurd curtain speech made by the star at the close of the first act.

There followed a number of dancing acts done by fifteen men and executed with great skill and precision. Eddie Mazier and Al Johnson had stunts in this part of the program, winning hearty applause for both singing and drollery.

The last scene was again at the Aero Club, the entire company giving a spectacular effect called "The Human Flag." Dockstader and his merry crew will be here through Saturday and if you like minstrelsy they are worth seeing.

The Parisian Cloak company, 113 South Sixteenth street, offer for Saturday, choice of several hundred women's new fall suits, including all sizes, styles and colors, worth up to $37.50 for $22.50. See their ad on page 6.
