European Impressions of a First-Tripper

By Rev. Adolf Kuit, Pastor Swedish Emmanuel Lutheran Church of Omaha.

SWEDEN is a pretty land. Its people are a kind people. To travel there is a journey of delight. The manner and methods of the Swedish nation have something so fascinating and so different from the rest of the world. They are all of the gentlest and most refined of the Germanic peoples of Europe. France's influence has been at work in Sweden since the days of the brilliant and literary Gustaf III (1771-1792) and later through the present talented Bernadotte dynasty founded in 1818 by Napoleon's general, a native of Pau in the Pyrenees, and elected to the throne by the Swedish people. Once Sweden was the home of the pirate-raiding, fearless vikings, whose raids were dreaded from the Baltic to the shores of Portugal. Once "the snow and majesty of the north," the noble and mighty Gustavus Adolphus (1611-1632), who over one of the three world powers of Europe, which were England, France and Sweden. In those days the Swedish character was historically creative and politically ambitious. Gustavus Adolphus threw soldiers into Germany in the Thirty Years' war and his genius, generalship and wisdom achieved the glorious independence of a Protestant civilization from the threatened subjection under a Latin, South European type of civil and religious life. Modern history was rescued. Today the Land of the Midnight Sun is the home of an intelligent, gentle and gifted people that are one of the great races of the military nations of Europe. How could the powerful people of Gustavus Adolphus become the docile nation of today? Charles XII (1697-1718), the celebrated erratic and tragical warrior, died Sweden by his unhappy campaigns, and finally was crushed (1709) at Poltava by Peter the Great. Just 100 years afterwards (1809) Sweden lost Finland to Russia. Almost a century from then (1809) Norway slipped away from the Swedish scepter and the pacific and learned Oscar I acquiesced in the separation without a stroke of his polished sword. The present serious and determined king might have done otherwise. Those three national defeats have hammered down the will of the Swedish people and hence "the gentle Sweden" of later history. A nation may suffer temporary reverses and still retain its prowess if victories only some time come back, but 100 years of continuous loss must tell, and has told, on the nation's life. The great weakness of fall Sweden today is its lack of sturdy will power and initiative such as you find in those semi-Celtic northerners, the rugged, forward and contentious Norwegians, a splendid mountain people.

and the revolution it is effecting in the entire social system of today. There are less illiterates in Sweden than in our own land. Sweden's literature is a marvel of beauty, as the language itself is one of the world's most expressive, finished and ringing. The lyrical (song) poetry often matches Heine and Shakespeare at their very best. You may go among the upper classes or the peasantry, everywhere the prevailing tone is refined. In this one respect the German falls by comparison. It is angular, provocative and inclined to resentment. As the Swedes are a nation of fine, well-bred and (whom?) feelings, whatever they do and say tends to have that same spirit. There is as much feeling in the Swedes as there is will in the independent, characterized Norwegians. At the same time the Swede is a calm and clear thinker. Had the profound philosopher Boström been a German and not a Swede, his gigantic personality-philosophy would have been one of the grand landmarks of thought. But the Swedes would exchange some of their refined backwardness for a little of the almost Celtic push and clamor of the Norwegians; the world would be astonished at the wealth of intellectual, spiritual and artistic attainments of the people in that pretty land of the midnight sun.

ner, then look to the luminous capital of the north, beautiful Stockholm. Would this city command the wealth of London or Paris, those strategically beautiful islets and shores would offer the finest opportunity for architectural magnificence and landscape architecture of perhaps any capital in Europe. But the Swedes are not now a commercial people, do not love money for money's sake as we Americans, though they are faithfully industrious and possessed of actual genius for mechanical engineering of every kind. (Our John Erickson of "Monitor and Merrimac" fame was trained in Sweden. Swedish civil and mechanical engineers are found all over America and the world). Therefore Stockholm can hardly become just such a show place as Berlin. Its palace is a plain, but quite majestic structure. Perhaps the finest new building is the superb "Nordiska museet" (Northern museum), in a sort of Swedish Rococo style of architecture, as striking a piece of work as the smaller German Rococo "Rathaus" of Leipzig. And what a stroke of genius the conception of this museum and its open air consort, "Skansen," out on a most beautiful peninsula, formerly a royal park. In the museum all the provinces of Sweden are represented in different rooms. This is the peasant department. In upper stories there comes a chronological display from the middle and higher classes. Here you can see how the people lived in their homes, the furniture in the parlors, the utensils and the national costumes of the folk-wood figures. Out on the rocky, woody "Skansen," Sweden's folk games and folk dances are given every day by experts. Characteristic peasant cottages have been brought in from all over the land. Home peasantry and folk music are offered to these, while national amusements, such as the "Maypole" are engaged in out of doors during the proper season. Folk life addresses and lectures, folk concerts, instruction in questions of importance to home and church and state—anything that tends to awaken the national spirit, rekindle the national consciousness finds artistic and scientific treatment.
