CRANKS AT WHITE HOUSE

Calls for "Batty" People Keep Guards on the Alert.

VICTIMS OF PRESIDENTIAL MANIA

Percentage of Insanities of District Army Found Around the White House—Traits and Nationality of Victims.

President Taft has enjoyed complete freedom from members of the crank family during his tour across the continent. Excepting the Portland (Ore.) incident, there has not been an occasion calling for the services of the secret service men or local police. The Portland incident seems to have been due to the over-zeal of one of the camera squad, whose efforts to get close to the president deserved police attention. Most of the crank family affected with the presidential mania gravitate to the national capital. Many are a purely local product. At St. Elizabeth's, the government hospital for the insane at Washington, there are 2,000 inmates, one-tenth of whom are afflicted with the presidential mania. Half of the number were taken into custody during the incumbency of the mighty hunter now departing himself in Africa. Perhaps because of the radical reform measures that saw their inception during Mr. Roosevelt's administration, and the number of men and women who had to see him on missions of real importance, there has never before been anything like so great a number of more or less demented persons trying to break into the President's sanctum. Nor has there been at any time so many crank letters, or such a lot of crank literature received at the White House as during those seven years. It was freely supposed that the new administration would see a distinct falling off in this class of visitors, but considering how short a time Mr. Taft has been in office, his popularity with the cranks is phenomenal, and it begins to look as if he might eventually outdo his predecessor in that line.

A Dangerous Foe.

About the most dangerous case that ever came under the notice of the authorities was that of a Swede, who, when he realized that he was being quietly sidetracked, drew a revolver and seriously wounded Policeman Sissel of the White House squad. It came to Washington in the spring of 1904, journeying most of the way from his home in Minneapolis in a freight car. He made his way to the White House and demanded an audience with the president, that he might lay before him certain facts of an alleged persecution. He announced himself as a famous machinist, controlling valuable patents which were made by a company of which he was president. He declared that his patents would revolutionize the world's business, and that his countrymen in Sweden were trying to have him poisoned and to steal his patents, certain peculiarities of dress and a curious flightiness in his conversation aroused the suspicions of the officer who led him through the basement of the White House to the guard room at the east end, where he was told to wait, presumably for the president.

A cab was called from a nearby stand and the man hustled into it to be taken to the First precinct station about half a mile away. Just as the cab started the Swede drew a heavy revolver and fired point blank at the officer. Fortunately his aim was as bad as his intention, and he inflicted what should have been only a slight wound. But subsequent developments led the doctors at the Emergency hospital, where Sissel went to have it dressed, to the conclusion that the bullet had been coated with poison, and that had this particular crank gained access to the president, Mr. Roosevelt might have shared the fate of McKinley.

The officer, wounded though he was, succeeded in subduing his prisoner and bringing him safely to the station. He was sent to St. Elizabeth's for a time, but was later sent to St. Paul, Minn. Quite a different sort of crank was a middle-aged, well-dressed woman who came to ask a trifling favor of the chief executive. She was, so she said, a member of a prominent Virginia family, at one time very wealthy. She had lost most of her money through ill-advised speculation. She said, however, that she was entitled to share in an estate valued at $200,000, but that "they" were keeping her out of it.

Through a medium she had learned that the money was buried in the sea off Old Point Comfort, and she had come to get the president to help her get it. She was told that the president was out riding and would not be back until late, but she said she would wait. When asked just how she expected the president to help her she explained that he, of course, owned the sea, and she thought the least he could do would be to drain it off in the neighborhood of Norfolk and Old Point, so that she could recover her lost fortune. She, too, was gently led off in the direction of the government hospital, but was later sent to her home.

All the Way from Iowa.

One man traveled all the way from Iowa to ask the president to help him escape from his enemies, who were pursuing him in airships and likely at any moment to drop bombs on him and destroy him. He was most worried by a Denver man, who had employed six men and two airships to keep a continual watch on him. And if they could not drop their bombs on him they would compass his destruction by means of compressed air which they carried stored in tanks at either end of their airships.

The suffragettes had had their representatives among the White House cranks. Two women, apparently excited by the discussions of female suffrage, in the newspapers and the rather strenuous jolting of the English suffragettes, came, one from New England, the other from Pennsylvania, each accompanied by a son, to demand the president retire in their favor.

Each of them wanted a chance at the job herself, but went to arrange things so that her children would succeed her. One of them had her cabinet all chosen, and was prepared as soon as she was sworn in to oust Admiral Dewey and replace him by a woman as the head of Uncle Sam's navy. Thus would she end the horrors of war and contribute to the peace policies of The Hague conference.

Both women, after a brief sojourn at St. Elizabeth's, were sent to their homes. Less than a year ago a young Austrian called and gravely presented to the secret service men a card that proclaimed him "Acting President Roosevelt." He demanded an audience with the president, but he had been there before, and the guards were not quite inclined to accept his card as evidence of his position. So they gently led him in another direction.

Hot After the Ice Trust.

One unfortunate, his imagination fired by the "trust-busting" exploits of the last administration, came to confide in the president a beautiful scheme to frustrate the machinations of the Ice trust. He was prepared to form and let Mr. Roosevelt in on the ground floor of a Polar Ice company. In return for his ground-floor privileges the president was to induce congress to back the venture with a fat appropriation.

This Polar Ice company was to cut his with thirty-six hours of being committed to St. Elizabeth's died of exhaustion—so violent were his paroxysms.

One of the most spectacular of these unfortunate was a New Yorker who, in the goodness of his heart, and the weakness of his head, came all the way to Washington to warn the president of an anarchistic plot to assassinate him. He only wanted to be allowed to sleep outside of the president's door and protect him with his life if necessary. And to guard against recognition he had blacked his hands and face in the most remarkable fashion.

It does not seem to make any difference whether the president is in Washington or not. Quite as many cranks come there to see him when he is not there as when he is. For instance, just recently, when it had been widely advertised that Mr. Taft, immediately after the signing of the Payne tariff bill, had retired to Beverly for his vacation, several unfortunate whom the guards described as "batty" or "dotty," came to the White House to see him.

A week or two before that a Chinaman was found wandering around the premises, apparently bent on seeing the president, though as he spoke no English, it was something of a puzzle what he expected to say to him. On finding unexpected difficulties in the way, he became greatly excited, and the officers had considerable trouble in getting him quietly to the police station, and eventually to the asylum, where he still remains and is likely to be for some time to come as Uncle Sam's guest.

CHICAGO SPENDER IN ACTION

Takes Run to the Northwest and Burns Money on the Way.

Henry C. Ostermann, the millionaire freight car manufacturer of Chicago, has been at Walla Walla, Wash., only four days, but he has started the natives by spending $3,000 in his own way. Other attractions have dropped to second place since the arrival of this modern Croesus with Mrs. Ostermann and his business associate, W. M. Brennan, in an automobile. Mr. Ostermann put the touring car in the repair shop and started to have a good time. These are a few of things he did: Allowed no one to buy a drink; grabbed a $10 bill from the bar, where another man had laid it, and, after tearing it into pieces, gave the owner another bill and bought him a drink; paid a band $2 whenever it played a piece he asked for; hired the band for a dance, tore a $100 bill in two and gave the leader half, promised the remainder later, and, after giving the band-

S.S.S. BEST TREATMENT FOR CATARRH

There is no way to cure Catarrh except to purify the blood, and thus do away with the cause. The symptoms may be benefited by the use of washes, inhalations, sprays, manettes, etc., and through the use of such treatment catarrh sufferers receive temporary relief and comfort. External and local measures however cannot have any effect on the blood, and therefore their use alone is of no real curative value. Catarrh is a deep-seated blood disease, and comes as the result of catarrhal matter and other impurities in the circulation. These morbid matters in the blood cause an inflammatory and irritated condition of the mucous membrane or tissue lining of the cavities of the body, producing an unhealthy secretion, ringing noises in the ears, stuffy feeling in the head and nose, headaches, hoarseness, bronchial affections, watery eyes, etc. S.S.S. is the best treatment for Catarrh because it is the greatest of all blood purifiers. This medicine removes every particle of the catarrhal impurity from the circulation, making this vital fluid pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, because they are nourished with pure, health-giving blood, every symptom disappears, and soon S.S.S. produces a perfect cure. S.S.S. does not contain any habit-forming drugs, which really never can cure Catarrh, but often ruin the health. Book on Catarrh and any medical advice free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.
