Gossip and Stories About Noted People

Lawyer in Forty Minutes.

OLONEE WILLIAM R. MORRISON, soldier of two wars, prosecutor, legislator, lawyer, congressman and tariff reformer, who died the other day, had a wonderful memory. His admission to the bar was in the nature of a joke. It occurred while he was in the legislature, relates the Chicago Tribune. At that time he was appointed a member of the judicial committee. He declined the appointment, saying such a committee should be composed of lawyers.

The speaker replied that if he were not a lawyer, he ought to be one; that his experience as circuit clerk put as many legal facts into his head as possessed by many lawyers, and he was ushered into the circuit court of Sangamon county, then in session, examined by the examining board, and in forty minutes received his diploma as a full fledged lawyer.

He was not content with that, however, but spent his spare time while in the legislature in the study of standard works and when he returned to Waterloo he was able to cope with the shrewdest legal minds.

Colonel Morrison's honesty of purpose was well illustrated in his fight for the senatorship in 1884. Three Chicago members held the balance of power. They refused to go into any caucus. One night Colonel Morrison was approached by one who did things, and informed that if he would get the appointment of McGarrigle for United States marshal he would be elected on the first ballot the next day.

The colonel replied that if McGarrigle could get the endorsement of the clean democrats of Chicago he would do all in his power to obtain the appointment for him, but that if he could not get such endorsement they could "go to Hell" with the senatorship. This cost the colonel the senatorship.

Tennyson's Critic.

Here is a Tennyson anecdote found in a French literary paper. The laureate, of course, was in the habit of receiving a

After looking at the victor's tongue and feeling his pulse, Clemenceau remarked: "Not much wrong here. What do you think you want?"

"I want to be a postman," replied the man. And he got an appointment—London Globe.

From Sea to Law Books.

Abandoning the sea for the law school, Captain Inman Sealy of the White Star liner Republic, which went down off Hatteras Island last winter after passengers and crew had been rescued through the "C. Q. D." messages of "Jack" Binns, wireless operator, has been enrolled as a freshman in the law department of the University of Michigan.

The hero of the marine disaster that thrilled two continents relates the Chicago Record-Herald, began to realize the dreams of his youth this morning when he appeared at the registrar's office and matriculated. Years and years ago, long before he snuffed the salt breeze from the captain's bridge, the master of the Republic had ambitions to take a course in admiralty law. Promotions came, the lure of the ocean was strong, and Captain Sealy would probably have gone down to the sea in ships all his days had not the Italian steamship Florida plied its nose out of the fog on January 21, and rammed a hole in the Republic.

Then came the drama of the high sea that held the attention of whole nations for days. "C. Q. D." messages crackled through the air summoning steamships to the rescue. Six persons, two of them passengers, were killed, but the rest of the human cargo of both crippled boats, 1,600 lives in all, were transferred to the steamer Baltic without mishap. Next day the Republic went down. Captain Sealy sticking at his bridge until the decks were under water and then climbing up the mast as it sunk still lower, refusing to abandon his boat until the last vestige was under the waves.

In the wake of the disaster, however, rose opportunity for the early ambitions of Captain Sealy. The White Star Line Company brought suit against the owners of the Florida. It may take years to get it through the courts, and pending the settlement Sealy, still under the employment of the White Star Line, will take his long-cherished course in admiralty law. On the other side of 60, he will seek to acquire one of the learned professions. As to whether he will hang out his shingle, that depends on how long the settlement of the suit will take.

Next week he will begin to attend classes with beardless freshmen, and when the initiation and hazing begin to "C. Q. D." signals of distress will be sent up by the captain. Today he intimated that if he were overlooked he would consider himself self-sighted.

"I am a freshman," he said, "and if my fellow 'freshers' are ducked in a pond or spanked up a tree or chased over the campus, and I escape a like fate, I shall feel that I have been neglected, and that I am missing something from my college career."

Jim Riley and His Freckles.

"James Whitcomb Riley, the 'Hoosier poet,' attended a big reunion of his old friends and neighbors of Hancock county on the 23 inst. He was called upon to remember any number of names which he confessed not to have heard for twenty years or more. He shook hands with them all—women, children and men.

"Hello, Jim," said one woman with an ear trumpet poised to catch his answer. Mr. Riley hesitated for a moment. "Sarah, I used to love you, Jim," came the bold confession, without a blush or a tremor.
