Buhl Marshal's Story Points Federal of Shelton's Plunge Hurt

GIRL'S TESTIMONY DAMAGING

One Alleged Bandit Easily Nabbed by Crafty Idaho Officer—Letter of Shelton's Fiance Hurt Lover's Chances.

The simplest story of the arrest of "Bill" Matthews by Buhl, Idaho, by City Marshal Eugene May of that town was the most striking feature yesterday afternoon in the trial of the alleged robbers of the Overland Limited train. This tale, coupled with the testimony of Lillian Stephenson, the fiancée of Shelton, is destined to play an important part in the case.

Matthews was arrested June 18 at the Buhl hotel, where he had registered as William Marvin. It had been tipped off to May that Matthews was wanted for the robbery and the marshal, by his well laid plans, had no difficulty in capturing his man. May appeared at Matthews' room behind a trusty six-shooter, forcing an easy surrender.

The man was writing a letter at the time and made an effort to destroy the misgiving, partially succeeding. The fragments of the letter, together with Matthews' suit case, revolver and clothes, were identified by the Buhl marshal.

It developed during the cross-examination that Matthews had, in addition to his other vocations, followed that of a stage driver and mail carrier. It was further intimated that at one time Matthews had been a locomotive engineer.

Postoffice Inspector Moxley was recalled during the afternoon and told of Shelton's arrest in Denver and his subsequent return to Omaha. Shelton insisted that he would be able to show that he was in his room in the Wyckoff flats between 11 and 12 o'clock the night of the robbery. Shelton claimed that he had been to a moving picture show with a Miss Myer, who was also a roomer at the flat.

Shelton Tells Story.
Shelton told a weird story of leaving Omaha after having ridden to the suburbs in a street car, and walking to Lincoln over the Northwestern tracks, where he took the Burlington to Denver.

Detectives Copeland Hall and P. J. Carr of Denver told of the arrest of Shelton and Lillian Stephenson in that city and of their examination at the office of the chief of police in Denver before being brought to Omaha.

Edward Hoffman, a detective of Colorado Springs, testified that he knew Grigware in 1927 and that his assumed name at that time was E. E. Hollinghead. He saw and knew Lawrence F. Golden about the same time and his nom de plume was P. J. Butterbaugh. He identified both men in the court room.

James Schneider of Spokane testified to having sold Frank Grigware a Colt's revolver in Spokane in 1928, the witness being at the time a clerk in the Holy-Mason hardware establishment. He knew Grigware personally from having been a member of the same base ball team.

Girl May Convict Lover.
The chain of evidence around the five men was strengthened by two powerful links welded by the government from the testimony of Miss Lillian Stephenson, fiancée of Shelton, one of the defendants, and Postoffice Inspector Charles Diddedford, who has letter written by Shelton.

Miss Stephenson's part in the play is paradoxical. Throughout the whole her one determination was to protect and shield her lover, and in it all she probably has added the word that will go far toward securing his conviction.

With a woman's loyalty and love she did what she could to save her sweetheart in the moment of his greatest danger, but her devotion was in reality his undoing.

After the men had been practically made known through the tell-tale photographs taken at Spokane and Denver, the detectives never doubted for a moment that Jack Shelton would return to Denver and to Miss Stephenson. The officers laid in wait for him and caught him with Miss Stephenson, to whom he had fled from Omaha.

There was not much in her story of dramatic interest, except that they were lovers. She first met him in Spokane, where both of them lived. Later she went to Walla Walla, Wash., alone, again meeting him there; then early in the present year both of them came to Denver. It was through him that she became acquainted with Grigware, Torgensen and Woods and this acquaintance dated from their first meeting in Spokane.

Tells of Whole Party.
She told of the whole party, Woods, Torgensen, Shelton and Grigware going to Hot Springs, Ark., some time in February and of her regular correspondence with all of them, not alone from Hot Springs, but from Kansas City and Joplin and other points up to about the middle of May. She did not see either of them personally again until Shelton appeared at her room in Denver, late in the evening, seemed haggard and extremely nervous and asked her if she had seen her picture and the rest of the boys in the papers. She had not seen the picture up to this time, and was startled when he showed it to her.

She read the story of the hold up in Omaha and realized at once that she might be implicated in the affair, though up to this time her name had not been mentioned in connection with it.

Shelton went to her room at once, and seeing duplicates of the tell-tale photographs in Denver, later she went to him, Omaha and realized at once that she might be implicated in the affair, though up to this time her name had not been mentioned in connection with it.

him, as that was the first time he had ever seen him.

Not Severely Examined.
Miss Stephenson was subjected only to the slightest cross-examination. She was once married and gave her age as 25. She is a pretty young woman, stylishly, yet modestly dressed, and evidently produced a favorable impression on the jury, for her straightforward answers to the examination given her by the attorney for the government.

That the five accused men were well known in Spokane was shown in the evidence of Charles Riddedford, postoffice inspector of Spokane. Inspector Riddedford has known Frank Grigware for nine or ten years, as well as his entire family. He also knew Shelton, whose proper name is Lawrence F. Golden, and his family for many years. He had been acquainted with Dan Dotner (D. W. Woods) for fifteen years and incidentally knew Bill Matthews.

Inspector Riddedford's attention was first directed to this case through seeing the picture of the four men in the Spokane Review after their arrest in Omaha. He recognized all of the men and particularly Grigware. He went at once to the meat market of James Grigware, a brother of Frank Grigware, and learned from him that some one had telegraphed to him from Denver under the name of J. C. Kelly for funds. The telegraph was later followed by a letter from Kelly, indicating that Frank was in serious trouble and needed $50 at once.

Court adjourned at 5 o'clock until 9:30 a. m. Monday. The government expects to put on only three more witnesses, after which the defense will have its innings.

Wrote For Money to Defend.
Before their arrest Shelton had told her that he had written to James Grigware, a brother of Frank Grigware, for money to assist in defending the boys. He wanted $50, but had received only $25. He wanted her to send this money to Omaha, so that it could not be traced to him. When came the question of securing a lawyer in Omaha to defend the three men they under arrest in Omaha and Miss Stephenson suggested that they secure the lawyer that defended Pat Crowe, but she did not know his name, and in the meanwhile had been placed under arrest, and she did not get to send the money to Omaha as Shelton had wanted her to do.

Shelton did not tell her what trouble the boys had gotten into and it was not until she had read the story in the papers that she knew of the boys being accused of the crime.

He told her that he had just come from the east, but finally admitted that he had been in Omaha the night of the robbery, but that he would be able to prove a good alibi by the landlady of whom he rented the rooms about two blocks from the Omaha postoffice. In that he came home from a moving picture show about 11 o'clock that night, and she chaffed him a little about being out so late. He told her, further, that he roomed with a man whom he had met on the street, but did not know
