Fashion's Newest Thoughts in Winter Headgear Revealed By This Authentic Presentation of Late Season Creations Tuesday and Wednesday Of This Week

Out of the chaos of designs and multitudes of half formed ideas which marked the early season's styles in millinery, that has developed the dominant trends will rule the Winter headgear. Fashion has separated the wheat from the chaff, setting her seal of approval on the tendencies which are genuinely beautiful. In this Mid-Winter display we present an authentic picture of these later and more fully developed styles, showing in clear, deft manner just what the Winter Maid will wear. Every hat is a masterpiece of beauty and workmanship. Every hat has a distinctive, different touch which marks it as being out of the ordinary—away from the stamped out designs characteristic of many showings.

Washington said, gave hope of more rapid progress in the uplift of his race than the accomplishments of the past.

"Bad whisky, mixed with bad white men and bad negroes," he blamed for the crimes and lynchings of the south. Mr. Washington was introduced to his audience by Judge Howard Kennedy, president of the University of Omaha, who took occasion to remark that this constituted the first public recognition of his newly founded institution. Bishop Abraham Grant of Kansas City, head of this diocese of the African Methodist Episcopal church, accompanied Mr. Washington.

Brothers-in-Law Disagree

One of Steinhil's models, a man named Antanoff, swore that the artist was the murderer of the painter told him that he intended to divorce his wife for the sake of her daughter. On the other hand M. Bouneaud, a brother-in-law of Steinhil, testified that the painter always had been married. He said that Steinhil loved his wife and was in no way suspicious of her. M. Bouneaud and his family, however, knew Mme. Steinhil's character and severed their relations with her after the gossip following the death of President Faure.
