The nearest approach that Mr. Aldrich made to any indication of a plan was his return to the subject of bank issues. He again mentioned the fact that the European countries were quite agreed on that subject and again referred to the circumstance central banking institutions for the issuance of bank paper.

He stated, however, that it could not be expected that any European banking system oculd be transplanted in its entirely to this country; and he again pointed out the great necessity of finding a plan which would not disturb established banks, nor interfore with the process of business. Whatever system should be adopted, he said, must be one looking to gradual charge, and mus have due regard to vest d
