

HAWLEY TO BE RAIL KING Said to Have Formed Alliance to Get the Southern Pacific. SUPPORTED BY STANDARD OIL Letter Dumps Union Pacific and Bays Southern Pacific and Will Take Huntington Estate Into Combine.

There is a report in railroad circles that Edwin Hawley has effected an alliance with the Standard Oil interests and the Huntington estate for control of the Southern Pacific, removing it from the Harriman system of railroads.

Standard Oil, the report goes, is unloading Union Pacific and buying up Southern Pacific as rapidly as possible and in this connection a sharp bearish movement in Union Pacific stocks is predicted.

Hawley has six railroads—the Iowa Central and Minneapolis & St. Louis, which, however, form practically one line now; the Chicago & Alton, the Clover Leaf, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas and the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Iowa Man to Be Big Boss. The triple alliance now reported contemplates the ascendancy of the Hawley star of conquest. The combination is not to end with the acquisition of the Southern Pacific, but will proceed in search of other western roads.

Interest in this report is accentuated because of the fact that Standard Oil had always been one of the main pillars under the Harriman superstructure and that now, so soon after the death of Harriman, his strongest ally is to drive the wedge to split the great Harriman organization.
