CIVIL WAR MYSTERY SOLVED

Capture of General Morgan in Ohio Traced to Boy's Betrayal.
A whole lot of questions that survived the civil war will be discussed and never settled so long as any of the participants are alive. One of these is around the death of General John H. Morgan, the confederate leader, who led a raid into Ohio and Indiana and penetrated farther into northern territory than any other southern commander. General Morgan was captured near the Ohio river, carried to the Ohio penitentiary, escaped, reorganized his command and was killed at Greenville, Tenn. N. H. Gaines, a dentist at 1116 Main street, was adjutant in General Morgan's command and saw his commander killed at Greenville. He had investigated the cause of the surprise, capture, and shooting of Morgan. An answer to a letter written to Greenville recently is, he believes, the true story.

"I had always believed that a young woman, the daughter-in-law of Mrs. Catherine D. Williams, whose husband was with the union army, gave the federal information which led to the surprise, capture and death of General Morgan," Mr. Gaines said. "When we approached the Williams home on the day before Morgan was killed we saw this young woman ride away from the house. General Morgan was suspicious and asked Mrs. Williams who the young woman was and where she was going. The reply was that the young woman was going to a neighbor's house for watermelons. The answer was frankly given and we believed it at the time. But after the general's death every one believed that the woman who was seen to ride away from the house went to where General A. G. Gillem, the federal commander, was camped and told him where Morgan could be found. Morgan stayed all night in the Williams house and was captured early the next morning. He was shot after he had surrendered and given up his arms.

"I wrote to Greenville some time ago, asking the postmaster to refer my letter to some one who knew of the circumstances of General Morgan's death. I received an answer from A. B. Wilson of that place, who looked into the matter. His answer acquits the young woman of treachery forty-five years after the death of Morgan."
Mr. Wilson's account of the death of the southern raider follows:
"It is impossible to run down or refute all reports in relation to this event. Because a woman left the home of Mrs. Williams shortly after the arrival of Morgan, General Duke jumped to the conclusion that she had acted traitor and reported Morgan's whereabouts to General Gillem. This is false. The young Mrs. Williams, daughter-in-law of Mrs. Catherine D. Williams, while her husband was, I suppose, a union man and within the federal lines, was a southern sympathizer just the same. She was, before her marriage, a Runbaugh, one of the best families of Virginia, and had two brothers in the southern army. One was a captain and the other was a major.

"The truth is that she went to a farm owned by her mother-in-law, four miles from Greenville, where she was seen by a number of persons. She intended to return with watermelons for the distinguished guest. On account of a heavy rain she did not return until the next day, but spent the night with Mrs. Bartley, a tenant on the farm, and came into Greenville that morning just after the federal had entered the town. She was escorted into town by federal pickets, thus rousing the suspicion that she had betrayed Morgan.
"I have also seen the dispatch from Washington giving the credit of Morgan's death to a Mrs. Sarah E. Thompson, who died August 26, this year. This is equally false. Mrs. Thompson had been married about four times. Her first husband, Thompson, whose name she chose to go by, was a federal scout, or, perhaps, a bush-whacker, during the war. I have heard of her setting up the claim of having caused the death of Morgan with the idea of getting a pension by act of congress. I am certain that she had nothing whatever to do with the matter. It would have been impossible for a woman to have made the

BIG DISTILLERY IS BURNED

Immense Plant of Cincinnati Concern Destroyed, with Quarter Million Loss.
CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 13.—The immense plant of the Union Distilling company, known as the Edgemont Springs Distillery at Carthage, a suburb of this city, was almost completely destroyed by fire early today. The loss is estimated at between $250,000 and $300,000. The plant is fully insured.
The entire plant of the distillery, with the exception of the bonded warehouse and the engine house, were destroyed. There were numerous explosions during the progress of the fire and in one of these William Theobald, a volunteer fireman, was seriously injured.
