Season of Overcoat Stealing—Evidence of the approach of winter is had in the number of reported thefts of overcoats made at the police headquarters during the last few days. No fewer than half a dozen different victims have informed the police of the loss of brand new coats and the detective force is being kept busy following clues. Most of the coats stolen were taken from public places, evidently by persons who dreaded the approach of winter without one of the outer garments.

Judge Sutton Stops Runaways

Jurist Probably Saves Boys from Injury, but Loses a New Headpiece.

What is purple and fine raiment compared to the chance to be a hero, less scuffling post, to the safety of the limbs and neck of young children.

Judge Abraham Lincoln Sutton of district court distinguished himself Thursday noon by stopping two runaway horses at the corner of Seventeenth and Harney streets, and he did it at the cost of one new $3 heavier fedora hat. But he saved two small boys from danger of being trampled upon.

A man was leading three horses south on Seventeenth street and the animals started to run. One fell and the other two got away from the man. They veered toward the two small boys. Judge Sutton thereupon dashed to the rescue with Mayor Dahlman as a tamer of restive steers.

He ran three steps at swift speed, jumped in front of the two horses and caught the lead line of each with either hand. At this instant a gust of wind lifted the forehead of the judicial head and waited it to the center of a puddle of nice thick, oozy mud. Then to make sure of a good job, the wind rolled the hat over and back a few times until it was thoroughly plastered.

The loss of the hat, for it was ruined, is greater, when it is recollected that a few days ago some wretch stole a brand new $50 overcoat from Judge Sutton, the coat being tumbled from his room in the court house.

The Value of Proprietary Medicines

is proven by the very large percentage of physicians' prescriptions for the same remedies found in every drug store in America, but they are written in Latin. The old standard proprietary medicines like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that have stood the test of time, deserve a place in every family medicine chest, and it is most gratifying if they are prescribed by physicians if they were able to devise a formula equally as efficacious.

MAN BRAGS HE ABUSED WIFE

"Sure, I Did," Boasts John Richardson to the Police Judge.

STARTS IT BY GETTING DRUNK

Woman Explodes Court Not to Release Her Husband, as She Feared He Will Repeat His Abuse of Her.

John Richardson 3112 13th street, charged with having abused his wife, boasted when arrested that the charge was true.

Richardson was arrested Wednesday night on complaint of his wife, who said he had abused her in a shameful manner. When called before Judge Crawford and asked to plead to the charge, Richardson started the court, its attendants and spectators, by calmly answering, "Sure, I'm guilty."

"What?" exclaimed the court. "Do you mean to come here in open court and boast of having abused your wife? Haven't you anything to say?" That was the trouble. "I have nothing to say," was Richardson's reply, whereupon Judge Crawford proceeded to deliver him a lecture. With brazen bravado, he refused to be even touched. When his wife was called to testify, Richardson gazed at her with contempt.

Mrs. Richardson said her husband came home, slightly intoxicated, and began "raising a rough house." He abused her shamefully and finally she was forced to summon the police. When the officers arrived, she said, Richardson told them the trouble arose because supper was not ready, which, Mrs. Richardson said, was untrue, as supper had been waiting for some time.

Excuses He Offers.

Pressed for an explanation of his conduct, Richardson finally said it was because his wife had failed to keep their two children, 5 and 2 years of age, clean. "My mother always kept her children clean," he remarked.

"And I presume your father abused your mother the way you have," interjected the court.

Mrs. Richardson further testified that on Saturday evening last, Richardson abused her and finally caught their youngest child by the throat and abused it. She finally left the house.

Upon ascertaining Mrs. Richardson would not testify to the fact that she had tried to jail, the court imposed a fifteen-day sentence.

Then Richardson grasped his wife's right hand and throwing his left arm around her, imploring the court to release him. Turning to the court he again resumed his brazen spirit and demanded to know what provision would be made for his wife while he was in jail. The court ordered him back to the detention room, saying Mrs. Richardson would be well provided for.

Later Mrs. Richardson implored the court not to release her husband. She said she had been forced to leave him in Topeka, but he had followed her and the children here and she had tried to make the best of it, but it no use.

DORCAS STREET OPENING WILL BE BEGUN TODAY

Street Commissioner to Tackle Job of Pleasing Residents on Hills and in Hollows.

Street Commissioner Flynn today will begin operations in the opening of Dorcas street, from Fourth to Seventh streets. Heretofore the people in that section have been using a road through some property owned by former Mayor Bemis, which has now been fenced in. Through a resolution of Councilman Berka $400 has been appropriated to get a cut made and some grading done, so that the residents in the three blocks between Fourth and Seventh street can get in and out with some fair degree of convenience.

"It is a difficult proposition in some ways," said the street commissioner. Part of the houses are away from the street, while others are just a few feet back. Every lady in charge of a house wants the work done in a particular way, and as every one of them can reason like a supreme court justice they tempt me to change my mind after each speech. And the finishing of the roadway is far from easy, it would be come famous throughout the land. The utilitarian side of the work is not all that appeals to me when I see beautiful prospects like this absolutely neglected and unheeded."

BIG-HEARTED FREMONT COMES TO RELIEF OF GIRL

E. R. Cuddaback Buys Transportation to Des Moines for Young Woman Who Loses Money.

Miss Eleanor Hathaway of Des Moines sat in the big waiting room at the Union station with tears in her eyes. The big-hearted Fremonters passed and wondered at her grief, when the smaller man said to E. R. Cuddaback, automobile dealer of Fremont, that something must be the matter with the girl. Cuddaback returned to the young woman and asked her what she was crying about. She told her story.

Two days before Miss Hathaway had arrived from Benevolence, enroute for her home at Des Moines, where she lived with an aunt at 715 West Second street. She had lost her pocketbook containing her ticket and money. For two whole days she had been sitting at Union station trying to find some way to get home and she said she had about concluded that life had no further attraction for her when the big Nebraska came along.

After hearing her story, Cuddaback, whose 20 pounds is mostly made up of heart, at once offered her his second seat that she get through all right. First he took her across the street and bought her something to eat. He then telephoned her aunt at Des Moines that her 15-year-old niece was enroute home and bought her a ticket to Des Moines and gave her a little change besides.

C. O. PRATT IS UNDER ARREST

Street Carmen's Union Leader is Involved in Trouble in Philadelphia.

Several eastern papers devote space to the recent arrest in Philadelphia of C. O. Pratt, international organizer of the Car men's union, who was present in Omaha during the recent strike. The arrest of the labor leader was but another incident in the chain of events leading to an effort to punish accused officers of the organization. Leaders were charged with having used the union for political ends.

Some Things You Want to Know

The National Live Stock Show.

This week will mark the climax of a remarkable season of live stock exhibitions. The tenth International Live Stock exposition is being held in the city of Chicago, and if there is an animal in the United States bred in the royal purple which is not there, it is only because the swarms of stockmen are so numerous that it is no chance of securing the blue ribbon at this exposition, the most coveted honor in the live stock world. To say that a horse, a cow, sheep or a pig carried off first honors at this exposition is almost equivalent to saying that it was the best of its kind living at the time of the award.

From the time the first exposition was held down to the present the awards of the International have been the highest honors of the show world, and the exposition has been a great success. But this year marks the high tide of competition. Here taking more cattle than in any previous year. The live stock exhibited is valued at millions of dollars. Nearly all of the blue ribbons that competed at the Seattle exposition will be there, as well as many that did not go so far west. With the Seattle exposition, the Kansas City Polaris and the Chicago International, all within the last few months, the breeders of the country have had especial advantage in bringing their ribbon winners to the attention of the nation.

One of the most interesting events in the International will be the judging of large loads of cattle. A splendid prize is to be given to the exhibitor of the finest car-load of cattle ready for the market, and all of the great cattle feeders of the country have entered their best. There are so many plans to be considered in the securing of this is always one of the most interesting contents of the exposition. The blue ribbon honors usually go to 2-year-old cattle, but sometimes yearlings are awarded the honors. Two families have taken first honors five out of nine times. After the show is over the exhibitors are sold for the shambles in like manner as the common herd.

A valuable phase of the International exposition is the work of training the students of agricultural colleges in the art of judging stock. There are many classes that are judged by student judges, under the guidance of veterans, and many such colleges have added a course in stock judging as an elective study in their curriculum. Their work is done under practical conditions at the stock shows.

In addition to the live stock exhibitions the annual congress of the American Society of Live Stock Nutrition also will meet in Chicago. This organization was founded for the purpose of making a careful and painstaking study of the best way to get the maximum of benefit out of a given quantity of food given to animals. The society has given much labor to the question, and beginning in 1908, has made many interesting lessons from the experiments made under actual feeding conditions. It is found, for instance, that some kinds of cattle are more economical manufacturers of beef than others. Some cows return more milk and butter for their board than others. Some foods yield more beef and milk than others. It is interesting to find out all about this subject for the benefit of the stock raisers and dairymen.

An attractive publication, from the stock-raiser's standpoint is a little book giving the pictures of prize-winning animals, starting with the famous old Rydick's Hambletonian, greatest of all sires of race horses, and ending down to the present day. One of the most remarkable pictures it contains is that of "Billy," the largest steer on record. He took the gold medal at the Chicago world's fair, and had an official weight of 4,735 pounds. Later he was exhibited all over the country, and is said to have weighed 4,000 pounds before he died.

But even Billy could not hold a candle to Jerry, a Holstein cow, owned by a Massachusetts stockman. He is said to measure seventeen and one-half hands high-tail by a hand than a good-sized horse. At 9 years old he measured ten feet, three inches around the girth, and weighed 4,285 pounds. It is said that in his younger days he was something of a traveler, and could walk a mile in thirty minutes, hitched to a wagon. There is a picture of Jerry showing his driver seated on a rocking chair on his massive back. Jerry seemed to take it as a matter of course.

Some of the fields of dairy cows of the different breeds, as shown at the live stock exhibitions, seem almost incredible. The Guernsey cow, Lilly Ella, gave more than twelve times her weight in milk in a single year, and yielded 912 pounds of butter in the same length of time. Another cow of the Guernsey breed in one year gave 12,132 pounds of milk and 229 pounds of butter. New York Holstein cow gave 84 pounds of milk in seven days, from which was made 2.4 pounds of butter. At this rate she would have given over 28,000 pounds of milk in twelve months, and would have made nearly 1,400 pounds of butter. But no cow has done as well as that for a whole year. The Holstein cow Cybele, owned by Meadville (Pa.) stockman, yielded 13,031 pounds of milk in one year. But even this record for a year was excelled by the Guernsey cow Yessie Sunbeam. During the year ending September 30, 1908, she gave 14,959 pounds of milk, from which was gathered butter fat equivalent to 1,000 pounds of butter. One of the reasons why this is probably the world's record in milk and butter production for a year.

When it comes to the matter of beef, one of the world's record prices for beef on the hoof was paid for the first champion steer at the first annual International exposition. The packers who had the honor of cutting up this champion paid $30 a pound for him, live weight. If the porterhouse of a 7-cent steer sells for 25 cents a pound, what must the porterhouse from that steer have cost the ultimate consumer?

St. Louis has one of the most remarkable shows in the world, and he has been exhibited at many stock shows. He is known as "The Famous Try Horse, Dan." During many years he has been used to try out the horses that come to the St. Louis market. The prospective purchaser hitches the horse he expects to buy with Dan, to see if he will work well or not. Old Dan never gets excited, and never lets his new team mate get on his nerves. Many thousand horses have been hitched by the side of Dan and thus tried out. The old fellow goes about his business with almost human intelligence, and seems to know what it's all about as well as any one around the horse market.

The St. Louis Exposition went down in history as the greatest mule show in the history of the world, both as to the excellence of the exhibits and as to the number of mules shown. One firm captured the majority of the championships in the different classes. Since that time the exhibition of mules and their relatives has become popular, and they will claim their share of attention at the International show.

The live stock seen on American soil, so far as the domestic species are concerned, springs from original importations from the Old World. Yet America was the original home of nearly every domestic animal. The indisputable records of the geologic past written by nature, tells plain story how the New World was inhabited by the ancestors of the horse and other domestic animals. Yet when the men of the Old World saw us we know it first set eyes on the New there was neither horse nor cow. The Spanish brought the first horses, and from them have grown the innumerable breeds.

Such live stock shows as that now in progress in Chicago have a great educational value. Shelby county, Missouri, in 1888, produced the lamb which won the first prize at the Chicago world's fair. The grower knew that he had a fine lot of wethers, he knew that he had won many county fair prizes, and he had some notion of his relative standing at the state fair. But he had no idea what a world's prize meant. Immediately after the blue ribbon was awarded an Englishman asked him to put a price on the lamb. The Missourian didn't wish to sell, so he asked what he considered to be a prohibitive price. The Englishman handed over the money in frantic haste and for $100 obtained possession of a lamb which he refused to sell for $1,000. Since that time too many big shows have been held—no Missourian will make that mistake now.

WIFE MAY ALLEGE BIGAMY

Woman from Whom Husband Secures Divorce Has Another Card to Play.

Walter L. Blackett, an advertising agent, secured a divorce decree the day before Christmas, but the news of it did not come to his wife as a Santa Claus present. Instead she did not learn of the order, she says, until April 1. An action which she has since begun will be no joke to Blackett if Mrs. Blackett wins, for she says she intends to prosecute him for bigamy.

Her action is for a vacation of the order granting the divorce on the ground that it was procured through fraud. After she filed her petition to this effect, Blackett remarried, and if the case goes his first wife's way, there won't be any second wife, in law, and Blackett will be in danger of further activity by his first spouse. Her intention to prosecute is announced by M. O. Cunningham, one of her attorneys.

Cheap Soaps are the Most Expensive

THE TROUBLE with cheap soaps is this: They contain so much uncombined alkali that they injure everything they come in contact with. THEY CLEAN CLOTHES—no doubt about it. But they do it at a frightful expense.

THE WOMAN who uses cheap soap saves 40 or 50 cents in the course of a year, but she loses ten times that much because the life of everything that is washed is shortened.

THAT IS WHY cheap soaps, in the long run, are the most expensive.

AND THAT IS ALSO WHY it pays to use a good, safe, dependable laundry soap like Lenox, even if it does cost a trifle more.
